It is a task worthy of any man's ambition, following the design of Lord Bacon, to endeavour, by an expurgation or consolidation of the statute law, and by a digest of the decisions of our courts of law and equity, to educe light out of darkness, and order out of confusion—in effect, to produce a code which will serve as a guide, in the place of the conflicting cases and ponderous statute-books, which serve to confuse rather than to enlighten the people and the Profession, and to render the administration of justice uncertain, unsatisfactory, and expensive.

Such a task has Lord Westbury before him: it is a great one, but by no means impossible. The Roman law was reduced to the form of a digest by the order of Justinian. The statutes of the various States of the United States of America, and of our own colonies—such, for instance, as those of Canada—have been reduced, in many instances, to one or two moderate-sized volumes; what is there to prevent us from doing the same things, or profiting by their example by doing them in a better manner?

We are apt to think such undertakings are impossible, merely because we do not consider to what causes our former failures are to be attributed.

Works of the nature we have suggested cannot be undertaken as a mere piece of by-play. Commissioners without salaries, or commissioners receiving salaries for public work, and yet retaining private practice, are worse than useless—they are obstructive. The persons who attempt the task of consolidating or expurgating our statute law, or digesting the numerous decisions of our courts of law and equity, must give up to it all their time and energies, and they would fairly deserve to be remunerated upon a scale worthy of the magnitude of their labours, rather than after the manner suggested and acted upon by a former Chancellor, more profuse in his promises than successful in his operations in the cause of law reform.

Lord Westbury, in undertaking the great law reforms which he has so long advocated, will, we doubt not, receive the support of all parties; and from the ranks of the Bar he will find no difficulty in selecting men, both of learning and experience, in sufficient numbers to insure the success of any work which he may take in hand.

OBSERVATIONS ON COAPE v. ARNOLD AND AUSTEN v. MARTIN:

How far Equity is governed by Analogy to Legal Rules.

So long as law and equity remain, as, notwithstanding any fusing process, they must to a great extent remain, "unconfounded," there are few subjects of inquiry more interesting to the equity student than the just limits of analogical reasoning. It is always a dangerous guide, apt to go in quest of fanciful resemblances, and to end its "wanderings" (to borrow the high-court phrase) by grasping an illusion.

An overstrained analogy seems to have had much to do in confusing the mind as to the true ground of the decision in the case of Coape v. Arnold (3 Sm. & G. 311; 1 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 313), which, whatever may be thought of the reasoning adduced, appears to be sustainable on a just view of the limitations of the will, considered with reference to the nature of the equitable subject-matter. That the trust was not executory (i. e. in the sense of being an imperfect trust†, or mere heads of a settlement, to be worked out in equity), but a trust executed (i. e. a perfected and final disposition, to be construed as it stands expressed), seems to have been admitted on all hands‡. It was, of course, immaterial what would have been the state of things if a legal conveyance had been actually made to the very uses of the will—immaterial whether the trusts were created by a direction to convey, or by a simple devise upon trusts, the trusts being indicated with absolute finality. The joint result, therefore, of the will and codicil was the devise of an equitable fee to A. for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; then to B. and his heirs for A.'s life, upon trust to support contingent remainders (without any disposition of the rents); then to the heirs of the body of A. It happened that A. was the testator's heir. It was contended that A. was equitable tenant in tail under the rule in Shelley's case. This construction necessarily required that A. should take an equitable (i. e. beneficial) estate of freehold, which might attract to him

* See the compendious and elegant prefix to Sugden on Powers.

† But Mr. Lewin, in his very valuable treatise, views the case as one of executory trust. Another solution has been suggested by the same learned writer, founded on the somewhat questionable doctrine of Pibus v. Mitford (1 Vent. 373), that if the devise is to be considered as reduced to a simple devise to the heirs of the body of A., the testator's heir, it is in effect a devise to A. for life, remainder to the heirs of his body, and so within the rule in Shelley's case. But is the heir in of a particular estate by descent? or does not the fee descend to the heir subject to an executory devise?

‡ See the distinction, as stated by Lord Eldon, in Jervois v. The Duke of Northumberland (1 J. & W. 530).

• See Bacon's Law Tracts.

the benefit of the limitation to his heirs special, considered as a remainder. Such attraction, be it observed, is not, as the inaccurate language commonly employed would import, the attraction of cohesion, for there is demonstrably not any uniting or coalescing under the rule, which, in effect, merely inserts the ancestor as the object of the limitation to the heirs, and then leaves the result to the operation of the general law, the particular estate merging or not, as it may happen to be immediate or mediate. To get at the desired conclusion it was requisite to shew that A. took a particular estate of the same quality with the remainder to his heirs, and therefore to insist that B. (the trustee) took an equitable estate for the life of A., of which estate, the usufruct, being undisposed of, devolved upon A. as heir of the testator. But in the assumption that B. took an equitable estate there was a fatal source of error: B. took nothing; he was the cipher representative of a shadow, and could not impart substance to the heir. To this illusive, analogical, freehold interest it was sought to attach the ulterior limitation. There was, besides, the difficulty, apparently insuperable, of treating A. as having inherited a particular estate, on which a remainder was expectant, within the true meaning of the rule. The solution of the problem presented by the case of Coape v. Arnold would seem, therefore, to be this—the term of ninety-nine years was nothing, as respects the question agitated; the limitation to B. was nothing, in respect of that or any other question concerning the construction or effect of the limitations. These irrelevancies being deducted, there remains simply a devise of the equitable inheritance to the heirs of the body of A., on whom, as heir of the testator, the whole equitable fee devolved, subject to that contingent executory devise. In commenting upon this decision, the very able editors of Jarman on Wills (vol. 2, p. 276, 2nd ed.), who seem dissatisfied with the decision, observe that it is not said, "Where the beneficial interest was during the life of A., it clearly could not have been in B., for the estate was limited to him upon trust; it must, therefore, have descended to A. as the heir." Now, the estate limited to B., if it was really anything, was a portion of the testator's equitable (i. e. beneficial) fee; but if the "beneficial interest" could not, as is here insisted, have been in B. for the life of A., it is difficult to see how B. could take any portion of that fee, or, consequently, how any "estate" whatever could vest in him, of which the undisposed-of usufruct would descend to the testator's heir. There would seem to have been a yet further point for consideration—a point which, if sustained, would have gone to extinguish the whole contention. There were ulterior equitable remainders to objects, of whom some may have been in esse, taking, therefore, vested interests (for clearly a contingent remainder in tail does not prevent the vesting of a subsequent remainder), and, during the suspense of the contingent limitation, vested interests in possession, subject only to the term of years. These observations assume that the effect of the limitations is not to be considered as if they were actually clothed, in the very form in which they present themselves, with the legal estate, for if so considered the question agitated could not arise at all, as then, indisputably, A., not having an estate of freehold of the same quality (legal) with the remainder to the heirs of his body, could not have taken an estate tail. Either we must view the equities as they stand—view them as pure equities—and then the only beneficial gifts are a term of ninety-nine years determinable, and a contingent executory estate tail; or we must view them as embodied in corresponding legal estates—view them as direct devises by a legal owner in fee—and then the question vanishes altogether. From this dilemma there is no escape, without the conjuring up of a phantom estate in B. by the magic of too subtle an analogy*.

AUSTEN v. MARTIN.

It was observed by Lord Cranworth, C., in the course of a judgment to which the reference is not at hand, that the ownership of land is divided into the legal estate and the equitable estate, and that there is not any intermediate or other species of interest. The so-called equitable estate is not, correctly speaking, an estate, but is the right to the beneficial enjoyment or usufruct. This may appear to be too plain to need the sanction of any authority; but a very recent decision at the Rolls seems to shew, that even primary principles require to be from time to time restated and enforced. In the case to which allusion is made (Austen v. Martin, Weekly Rep., June 8, 1861) a testator devised an equity of redemption in fee (the land being subject to a legal mortgage in fee, with power of sale) to A. (the mortgagee), upon trust to sell, and apply the proceeds, after payment of debts and funeral expenses, upon certain trusts, and appointed A. sole executor. A. renounced the probate and disclaimed the devise, and administration with the will annexed was granted to B., the testator's heir-at-law. B., professedly in execution of the trust for sale, with the concurrence of the mortgagee, conveyed to C., a purchaser, the mortgage debt being paid out of the purchase money, and the surplus paid to B. On a subsequent sale by C., his vendee objected that B. was not authorised to execute the trust for sale, and give a valid discharge. The Master of the Rolls held, however, that "as regards the equitable estate in these hereditaments, the whole beneficial interest in them was vested in B., either in his character of heir-at-law or in his character of legal personal representative;" adding, "and all that beneficial interest in the hereditaments was conveyed to, and vested in, C., and accordingly C. was ready to convey all the legal estate" (which estate clearly he acquired from A., the mortgagee) "and all the beneficial interest in this property to the purchaser." Now, assuming that the trusts declared, by the will, of the proceeds of the sale, exhausted the whole beneficial interest, nothing was left to devolve upon B. but the right of contesting the validity of the devise, on the ground of incompetency in the testator, or informality in the instrument, or fraud in procuring it; and that right would seem to constitute a very questionable qualification for the office vacated by A., which imposed the duty of carrying the trusts of the will into execution. If B. stood, as he would appear to have stood, in the position of a disinherited heir, he was just the very last person in whom an intention to repossess confidence could with any propriety be constructively imputed to the testator. The testator, by devising to A., had said, in effect, that the heir was not to be trusted. The legal fee was admittedly in A. as mortgagee; the duty or office of executing the trusts was confided to A., under the form of a devise; and the beneficial interest was in the cestui que trust of the sale monies. Unless, therefore, some third species of ownership exists—something which is distinct at once from the legal estate and beneficial interest—something which is nothing at law or in equity, but is nevertheless a veritable, cognisable substance for all repudiated fiduciary purposes—unless the void occasioned by the disclaimer can be supplied by some such judicial creation, B., as heir, was more absolutely unconcerned in the matter of the sale than any stranger. Indeed, if concerned at all, his concern was to overthrow, not to execute, the will. It is not less difficult to perceive that B., as the administrator, was the party to sell and give a receipt, seeing that he, as such, was a functionary not only never contemplated by the testator, but unauthorised to meddle with the realty at all; and if B. neither as heir nor as administrator was competent to execute the trust, the accident of his uniting these characters in himself could not strengthen his position. From the difficulty of referring this decision to any definite principle, it would seem that it must be added to that unhappy category of cases which, however dictated by the laudable desire of promoting the free interchange of property, have printed upon the threshold of every auction-room "Cave canem."

It cannot be truly said that all the devices of conveyancers have tended to facilitate alienation, but certainly a departure from their practice in the instances alluded to has bred much litigation and more chamber doubts, which must long remain unresolved, as well as a somewhat unseemly conflict of judicial opinion. The decision here commented on may not improbably open a new source of confusion in trusteeships of equitable estates, and be followed by applications for orders on heirs and devisees of equitable mortgages to execute conveyances—applications to be met, with some shew of reason, by the claim of a beneficial interest. Even disinherited heirs may be required by purchasers to concur for the purpose of denuding themselves of interests of which their ancestors have already stripped them.

There are three or four vexed matters which for some years past have been from time to time teasing courts of equity by their verbal differences, and seriously obstructing the interchange of property, and which, like the separate-estate entanglement, can be ended only by such adjudication as shall authoritatively place or replace them on broad and enduring principles.

WEST INDIA INCUMBERED ESTATES ACT.

"At the Court at Buckingham Palace, on the 26th June, 1861, present the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

"Whereas, by the West Indian Incumbered Estates Acts, 1854 and 1858, provision was made to facilitate the sale and transfer of incumbered estates in the several West Indian colonies named in a schedule to the said act of 1854 (among which is the island of Jamaica), and it was enacted that her Majesty might, from time to time, by Order in Council, direct the said acts to come into operation in any of the said colonies, but that no such Order in Council should be made in respect of any colony until the Legislature thereof should have presented an address to her Majesty, praying her Majesty to issue such order, and should also have made provision, to the satisfaction of her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, for payment of the salaries of the local commissioners in the said acts mentioned, and of all such assistant secretaries, clerks, messengers, and officers as might be appointed under the said acts in such colony, and of such other expenses of carrying the said acts into execution as were therein directed to be provided for by the said Legislature:

"And whereas the Legislature of Jamaica, by an address, has prayed her Majesty to issue such order as aforesaid, and by an act passed on the 14th February, 1861, intituled 'An Act for carrying into Execution in this Island the West Indian Incumbered Estates Acts, 1854 and 1858,' has made provision for the payment of such salaries and other expenses as aforesaid, to the satisfaction of her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies:

"It is therefore hereby ordered by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, that the said West Indian Incumbered Estates Acts, 1854 and 1858, shall, from the date of this Order in Council, come into operation in Jamaica.

"ARTHUR HELPS."

At the Court at Buckingham Palace, on the 26th June, her Majesty in Council was pleased to deliver the Great Seal to the Right Hon. Sir Richard Bethell, Knt., whereupon the oath of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain was, by her Majesty's command, administered to him, and he took his place at the Board accordingly.

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters-patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Baron of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto the Right Hon. Sir Richard Bethell, Knt., Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, and to the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten, by the name, style, and title of Baron Westbury, of Westbury, in the county of Wilts.

DEATH OF SIR JOHN PATTESON.—We have to announce the decease, on the 28th June, in his seventy-first year, of Sir John Patteson, one of the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench from 1830 to 1852. On resigning his judgeship he was made a Privy Councillor, and frequently sat in the Judicial Committee of that body, until compelled to refrain by ill health. He was one of those instances of appointment to the high office of a judge of a superior court without the previous recommendation either of a silk gown or a seat in Parliament. When placed on the Bench, his standing at the Bar was comparatively short, but he had practised as a special pleader for several years before his call. Mr. Justice Patteson was an able and pains-taking judge, and as upright a judge as ever sat on the Bench of this country. He was also a man of excellent temper, which was seldom ruffled, except occasionally, when, through an unfortunate infirmity in his hearing, he was unable to catch the arguments of counsel or the evidence of witnesses.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 13, 1861.

SEVERAL biographies of the late Lord Chancellor have appeared in the newspapers since his decease. We do not propose to follow this example, but shall merely direct attention to that part of his chequered career in which he appears as a legislator; in order to see how far, in that respect, he has redeemed the debt which, according to Lord Bacon, every man owes to his profession.

There are several statutes known in the Profession by the title of "Lord Campbell's Acts," namely, the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, relative to defamation; the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, for compensating the families of persons killed by accidents; and the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, the Administration of Criminal Justice Improvement Act. Of these statutes it may fairly be said, that although not long, they, and especially the two first, have introduced new principles into our law. The first relates to the law of defamatory words and libel, which before that statute was certainly in a state anything but satisfactory. Its objects are declared by the preamble to be, "for the better protection of private character, and for more effectually securing the liberty of the press, and for better preventing abuses in exercising the said liberty." With these views, the statute (inter alia) allows the defendant in any action for defamation to give an apology in evidence in mitigation of damages; and where the action is for a libel in any public newspaper or periodical publication, he may plead that it was inserted without actual malice or gross negligence, and that before the commencement of the action, or at the earliest opportunity afterwards, he inserted an apology, and may pay money into court as amends. The 6th section, putting an end to the absurd and immoral dogma, "the greater the truth the greater the libel," enacts, that on criminal proceedings for libel the truth may be pleaded, with an averment that it was for the public benefit that the facts should be published; and the Court, in passing sentence, shall take into consideration the truth or falsehood of those facts. Another very beneficial enactment is contained in sect. 7, that in criminal proceedings for libel the defendant may rebut a prima facie case of publication by an agent. Previous to this statute, if the servant of a bookseller sold in his shop a libellous publication, without either the knowledge of, or carelessness in the master, he was nevertheless criminally responsible for the publication; and the common opinion was, that he could not by any evidence remove that responsibility. (See Ph. & Am. Ev. 466).

The second of these acts (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93) introduced into our law a principle previously unknown. By the ancient law, when a person was killed per infortunium, the instrument which caused his death was forfeited, which forfeiture was in after times commuted for a sum of money. This species of forfeiture was called a "deodand;" which, according to Mr. Justice Blackstone (1 Bl. Com. 300), "seems to have been designed, in the blind days of Popery, as an expiation for the souls of such as were snatched away by sudden death, and for that purpose ought properly to have been given to holy church, in the same manner as the apparel of a stranger, who was found dead, was applied to purchase masses for the good of his soul." With the Reformation this of course came to an end, but the practice of inflicting a nominal deodand still continued. It is, however, worthy observation, that for some short time before the abolition of deodands by a statute of the same session, the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 62, juries had begun to impose deodands to a real, and often serious, amount. That statute abolishes them altogether, the Legislature probably deeming that all that was really valuable in the system was more effectually attained by the provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 93.

Previous to the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, if a party received personal injury from the carelessness of another, he might bring his action, and recover damages; still, as that action died with the person, and did not survive to the personal representative, the relatives of the deceased, whose position and prospects were injured by his death, were without remedy. The two following reasons for this are assigned by Parke, B., in Armsworth v. The South-eastern Railway Company (11 Jur. 758), which was, we believe, the first decided case under the statute:—"First, because the law provided a remedy for such mischiefs only as affected rights; and a man has not such a legal right in the life of his parent as he has in his own—the relation between parents and their children giving rise merely to what moralists call 'imperfect obligations.' Another reason was, that it was considered impossible to form an estimate of the value of human life, either to a man himself, or to others connected with him."

The statute in question, the principle of which was probably taken from the law of Scotland, enacts, "Whosoever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would (if death had not ensued) have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof, then and in every such case the person who would have been liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death shall have been caused under such circumstances as amount in law to felony." It then goes on to provide, that the damages recovered "shall be for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent, and child of the person whose death shall have been so caused, and shall be brought by and in the name of the executor or administrator of the person deceased; and in every such action the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively for whom and for whose benefit such action shall be brought." It provides also, "that the amount so recovered, after deducting the costs not recovered from the defendant, shall be divided amongst the before-mentioned parties, in such shares as the jury by their verdict shall find and direct."

In the construction of this statute, the difficulty, or rather impossibility, of ascertaining the value of a man's life has been avoided. For instance, in the case already referred to, Parke, B., told the jury, "You cannot estimate the value of a person's life to his relatives. No sum of money could compensate a child for the loss of its parent. . . . You must estimate the damage by the same principle as if a wound had been inflicted. Scarcely any sum could compensate a labouring man for the loss of a limb, yet you do not in such a case give him enough to maintain him for life. . . . I therefore advise you to take a reasonable view of the case, and give what you consider a fair compensation."

The remaining statute (14 & 15 Vict. c. 100) was passed for the purpose of improving the administration of the criminal law, chiefly by removing technical difficulties, which frequently operated most seriously to the defeat of justice. With this view powers of amendment are given to the Court; the extreme particularity required in describing the crime in the indictment—as, for instance, in the description of the form and mode of death in cases of murder—is abolished; the old law of the merger of offences is considerably modified, perhaps we might say recast, &c.

Lord Campbell's name is also connected with the great constitutional question raised in Stockdale v. Hansard (9 Ad. & El. 1), relative to the privilege claimed by the House of Commons to publish libellous matter, if deemed by that House to be for the public good. Out of that case arose the great and most unseemly contest between the Court of Queen's Bench and the House of Commons, which resulted in the stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 9. As a member of the House of Commons, he seems to have believed that the Court of Queen's Bench would allow the privilege; and as Attorney-General he argued the question before that Court most ably, and at great length, though unsuccessfully.

Lord Campbell made some efforts at legislation which were not successful. Among these was a bill, introduced by him into the House of Peers in March, 1859, to abolish the rule requiring unanimity in the verdicts of juries. How far this project had its origin in his Scotch views and sympathies is not easy to say. The bill was ably discussed on both sides, chiefly by the law lords, but rejected by the very decisive majority of twenty-three to seven.

FOREIGN LAW ASCERTAINMENT ACTS.

OUR attention has been directed to a mistake in our leading article of the 29th June (ante, p. 256), relative to the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63, "to afford facilities for the more certain ascertainment of the law administered in one part of her Majesty's dominions when pleaded in the courts of another part thereof," and the 24 Vict. c. 11, "to afford facilities for the better ascertainment of the law of foreign countries when pleaded in courts within her Majesty's dominions." We there stated that the enactments in those statutes only provided for the case where an action is pending. In this we followed the language of the enacting sections of those statutes; but their interpretation clauses impose a non-natural signification on that word, which they declare "shall include every judicial proceeding instituted in any court, civil, criminal, or ecclesiastical."

AUSTEN v. MARTIN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Are not the criticisms of your correspondent "W. H." somewhat refined? Surely, after disclaimer by the mortgagee, the heir-at-law of the mortgagor was a trustee for the administrator, i. e. himself, as the trust expressly provided for the payment of debts and funeral expenses.

I cannot consider the expressions of the Master of the Rolls in this case at all unwarranted.

Your obedient servant,
G. L.

Rolls Chambers, Chancery-lane, July 6, 1861.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

July 8.—It was stated, on the part of the Government, as their intention to take the second reading of the Courts of Justice Building Bill, which had been sent up from the Commons, with the understanding that discussion on it should be deferred until the result of the Courts of Justice Building (Money) Bill, still in the Commons, should be ascertained.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

July 3.—Mr. Walpole moved the second reading of the Indictable Offences (Metropolitan District) Bill.

Mr. Hunt moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day three months.

A debate ensued, which was adjourned.

July 9.—Sir G. C. Lewis obtained leave to bring in a bill for the amendment of the acts relative to the payment of the expenses of prosecutions.

THE BILLS TO AUTHORISE THE CONSTRUCTION OF NEW COURTS OF JUSTICE.

THE Government plan for building new courts of justice is comprised in the two following bills. The first has passed the House of Commons, where it had been referred to a select committee, and now awaits a second reading in the House of Lords. The latter, on which the former depends, has been read a second time in the House of Commons, and referred to a select committee, with an instruction to consider the question of site.

A Bill (as amended by the Select Committee) to enable the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works to acquire a Site for the Erection of Courts of Justice, and of the various Offices belonging to the same.

Whereas a commission was issued in the year 1858, under the sign-manual of her Majesty, for the purpose of inquiring into the expediency of bringing together into one place or neighbourhood all the superior courts of law and equity, the Probate and Divorce Courts, and the Court of Admiralty, and the various offices belonging to the same, and into the means which existed or might be supplied for providing a site or sites, and for erecting suitable buildings for carrying out the above objects: and whereas the said commission have reported to her Majesty that the concentration of such courts is expedient, and have recommended as a site for the said courts and offices certain houses, tenements, and other buildings and hereditaments situate in the parish of St. Clement Danes and the Liberty of the Rolls, in the county of Middlesex, and the parish of St. Dunstan in the West, in the city of London, and more particularly described and shewn on the plans hereinafter mentioned, but such lands cannot be acquired without the authority of Parliament: and whereas duplicate plans, describing the situation of the said houses, tenements, and other buildings and lands, with a book of reference thereto, containing the names of the owners and leasees, or reputed owners and leasees, and of the occupiers thereof, have been deposited with the clerk of the peace for the county of Middlesex, at his office at the Sessions-house, Clerkenwell, and with the clerk of the peace for the city of London, at his office at the Sessions-house in the Old Bailey, and it is expedient that powers should be given to the commissioners to purchase such lands, and to provide accommodation for the said courts and offices, or some of them: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Courts of Justice Building Act, 1861."

2. Incorporates for its purposes the Commissioners of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings.

3. The purposes of this act are the acquisition in the same neighbourhood of a convenient site for the accommodation of the superior courts of law and equity, or some of them, the Probate and Divorce Courts, and the Courts of Admiralty and Bankruptcy, and the various offices connected with them, and of such other courts and offices for the public service as may from time to time be prescribed by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and the erection on such site of suitable buildings, with all proper furniture and conveniences, and the constructing and doing such works and things as are conducive to the attainment of the above purposes, or any of them, or incidental thereto.

4. Empowers the commissioners to purchase lands.

5. Which are to continue subject to land tax and rates.

6. Power of commissioners to enter on lands.

7. The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the amending act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 106, to be incorporated with the present, except sect. 16 of the former, and the bond required by sect. 85 of the same shall be sufficient without sureties.

8. Questions of disputed compensation may be determined by a jury in the Lord Mayor's Court.

9. Relates to errors in plans.

10. Relates to the extinction of rights of way and other easements.

11. The limit for the compulsory purchase of lands shall be five years.

12. Commissioners empowered to pull down buildings and execute works.

13. Saving the rights of the Metropolitan Board of Works.

14. And certain rights of the Commissioners of Sewers.

15. Exemption from the first part of the Metropolitan Buildings Act, 1855.

16. No purchases to be made without the authority of the Lords of the Treasury.

17. Relates to the authentication of notices.

18. Orders concerning money paid into court may be made at chambers.

19. Penalty for obstructing commissioners.

20. Instruments not liable to stamp duty.

21. Conveyances to be enrolled.

22. Plans to be deposited, and open for inspection.

A Bill for supplying Means towards defraying the Expense of carrying into effect the Courts of Justice Building Act.

Whereas large sums of money have been, and continue to be, from time to time paid into the Bank of England to the credit of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in England, by the suitors in that court and others, either for safe custody during the pendency of litigation, or for the purpose of the same being distributed or otherwise: and whereas such sums are invested, or not, in Government securities, for the benefit of persons interested therein, according as such persons do or do not apply to the court for such investment to be made, but, in consequence of the disinclination or neglect of such persons to have such monies invested, there is always arising from such deposits a large balance of cash in the Bank of England, hereinafter referred to as "the general cash balance," remaining uninvested and unemployed: and whereas portions of such general cash balance have from time to time, under the authority of acts of Parliament, been invested in Government securities, in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, on account of the public, and not for the benefit of any particular persons: and whereas the investments so made are realised from time to time as the exigencies of the suitors require, and the produce paid back to the account of the general cash balance: and whereas portions of the income arising from such investments of the general cash balance have been applied to various purposes from time to time directed by Parliament, and the surplus of such income was, from the year 1768 up to the year 1852, invested and accumulated to the credit of an account intitled "Account of securities purchased with surplus interest arising from securities carried to account of monies placed out for the benefit and better security of the suitors of the High Court of Chancery," but subsequently thereto such surplus, in pursuance of acts of Parliament, has been carried over and added to the Sutors' Fee Fund account: and whereas there is now standing to the credit of the said account a sum of stock, hereinafter referred to as "the Surplus Interest Fund," consisting of the following sums; that is to say, 570,700*l.* 1*6s.* 1*d.* Bank 3*l.* per Cent. Annuities, 720,904*l.* 3*s.* 5*d.* Reduced Annuities, and 241*l.* 6*s.* New 3*l.* per Cent. Annuities, making in the whole 1,291,629*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* of such annuities: and whereas there is also standing in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to an account intitled "Account of monies placed out to provide for the officers of the High Court of Chancery," a sum of 201,028*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.* Bank 3*l.* per Cent. Annuities: and whereas such last-mentioned sum of stock, hereinafter referred to as "the Chancery Surplus Fee Fund," has arisen from the accumulation of surplus fees received since the year 1833 from suitors in the Court of Chancery, and carried to the said account in pursuance of an act of the session of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 94: and whereas there is now standing to the credit of an account in the Paymaster-General's books, called "The account of the Common-law Surplus Fee Fund," the sum of 105,773*l.* cash, or thereabouts: and whereas such cash, hereinafter referred to as "the Common-law Surplus Fee Fund," has arisen from the surplus of the fees received from suitors in the courts of common law, paid to the credit of the above-mentioned account in pursuance of divers acts of Parliament: and whereas a bill has been introduced into Parliament in the present session by the short title of "Courts of Justice Building Act, 1861," and the object of such bill is to purchase a site capable of affording accommodation to all the superior courts of law and equity, the Probate and Divorce Courts, and the High Court of Admiralty, and the various offices belonging to the same, and to erect suitable buildings for such courts and offices; and it is by the said bill provided that the expenses to be incurred in carrying into effect the said Courts of Justice Building Act are to be defrayed out of monies to be provided by Parliament; and it is expedient that the several funds, hereinafter described as "the Surplus Interest Fund," "the Chancery Surplus Fee Fund," and "the Common-law Surplus Fee Fund," should be appropriated towards replacing the sums so provided: and whereas the capital of the Surplus Interest Fund is at present liable to supply any deficiency occurring in the realisation of such investments of portions of the general cash balance to answer the demands of the suitors; and the capital of the Chancery Surplus Fee Fund is at present liable to supply any deficiency in the Sutors' Fee Fund for payment of the charges thereon: and whereas the income arising from the Surplus Interest Fund and Chancery Surplus Fee Fund is charged, together with other funds which are not appropriated by this act, with various annual payments for salaries, pensions, compensation allowances, and other miscellaneous purposes; and in the event of the Surplus Interest Fund and Chancery Surplus Fee Fund being appropriated to the purposes above mentioned there may be a temporary loss of income to the Sutors' Fee Fund, which it may be necessary to make good to a limited extent: and whereas it is expedient that provisions should be made for making good any contingent deficiency or loss of income: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Appropriation of Funds.

SECT. 1. Whenever, under the direction of Parliament, any money shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund towards defraying the expenses to be incurred in carrying into effect the Courts of Justice Building Act, 1861, there shall be paid, in manner hereinafter mentioned, first, out of the Common-law Surplus Fee Fund, and, secondly, out of the produce of the Surplus Interest Fund and the Chancery Surplus Fee Fund, so far as such funds will extend, into the receipt of her Majesty's Exchequer, to be carried to and form part of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, such sums as may be equivalent to the amount of monies so provided by Parliament.

2. The Paymaster-General shall from time to time, until all monies provided by Parliament for the purposes of the Courts of Justice Building Act, 1861, have been replaced, pay into the receipt of the Exchequer all monies for the time being standing in his books to the account of the Common-law Surplus Fee Fund, at such times and in such manner as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may direct; and there shall from time to time be sold, under the order of the Lord Chancellor, such portions of the Surplus Interest Fund and Chancery Surplus Fee Fund, or either of them, as will produce the amount of cash specified in any warrants from time to time issued by the said commissioners, and the monies arising from every such sale shall be received by one of the cashiers of the Bank of England, and be paid by him to the account of her Majesty's Exchequer at the Bank of England.

3. There shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund, or the growing produce thereof, into the Bank of England, to the credit of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to the account of the Sutors' Fee Fund, on the 1st February, on the 1st May, on the 1st August, and on the 1st November in every year, such sum, not exceeding in any one year 40,000*l.*, as may be sufficient to make good to the Sutors' Fee Fund any loss of income caused by the sales of the funds hereby directed to be sold, after deducting or taking credit for the amount of any salaries payable to the abolished Masters of the Court of Chancery and their clerks, and to the master of reports, and of any compensation allowances charged on the Sutors' Fund in Chancery, or the said Sutors' Fee Fund, and existing at the time of the passing of this act, which from time to time may cease to be payable, the first of such payments to be made on such one of the said days as may first happen after any sale of the said fund has taken place.

4. If the stock purchased out of the general cash balance of the suitors is at any time insufficient to satisfy the claims of the suitors thereon, such deficiency shall, to the extent to which the Surplus Interest Fund would have been available, be made good out of the Consolidated Fund.

5. As often as there shall be a deficiency in the Sutors' Fee Fund at any of the times appointed for the payment thereof of any of the charges thereon, such deficiency shall be supplied out of the Consolidated Fund, to the extent to which the Chancery Surplus Fee Fund would have been available; but this provision is not to extend to supplying any deficiency caused by any alteration which may be made in any of the fees payable by the suitors in Chancery, unless such alteration shall be approved by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

Saving of Jurisdiction on Removal of Courts.

6. Notwithstanding their removal to the site provided by the Concentration of the Courts of Justice Act, 1861, the superior courts of law and equity may exercise the same jurisdiction and enjoy the same rights and privileges as they have hitherto exercised and enjoyed, and all statutes, charters, and other instruments wherein Westminster is described or referred to as being the locality of the said courts shall be construed as if the site provided by the said act had been described or referred to in the said statutes, charters, and other instruments as the locality of the said courts instead of Westminster.

7. Her Majesty may, by Order in Council, make any alterations that may be thought expedient for the purpose of adapting the forms of testing writs and other instruments, and the forms themselves of writs or other instruments, in use in the said courts, to the change of locality made by the said Concentration of Courts of Justice Act.

8. This act shall not come into operation until the Courts of Justice Building Act, 1861, has passed into a law.

9. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Courts of Justice Building Act (Money), 1861."

THE JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—The last meeting of this society for the present season took place at its rooms, 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, on Monday, the 8th July; Mr. W. M. Best in the chair: when a paper was read by Mr. F. M. Nichols on "The Classification of Statutes." A discussion ensued, in which the Chairman, Mr. H. Stevens, Mr. Westlake, Dr. Waddilove, Mr. Cohen, Mr. A. J. Wood, and Mr. W. F. Robinson took part. The society then adjourned until November.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 20, 1861.

As we are now pretty far advanced in the month of July, it is tolerably obvious that the present session of Parliament cannot last much longer; and, indeed, report assigns about the middle of August as the date of prorogation. Under these circumstances the inquiry naturally presents itself, how the remaining time of the Houses is likely to be employed, and what is the probability of useful legislative measures resulting from their deliberations. We shall restrict our attention to the subject of law reform, not only because it is the proper subject of a journal like the present, but also because it is one on which the present session has hitherto been singularly unproductive. The truth is, that a large number of measures, both of law reform and soi-disant law reform, have been brought forward during its course; many of which have been rejected, and several of the rest, having been more or less discussed, now await their fate. But it is most unsatisfactory to contemplate the number and importance of these latter, and compare them with the very limited time at the disposal of both Houses; to say nothing of the number of members who have left town, and will take no further part in the business of legislation this session, or of the exhausted energies of those who remain, and by whom that business must necessarily be dispatched. Apart from a number of measures of imperial concern, and several others affecting Ireland and Scotland only, the following measures of law reform, among others, remain for discussion.

First comes the Government measure for the amendment of the law of bankruptcy and insolvency. This bill, having passed the Commons, has received in the Lords some alterations of a most important kind, with some of which the Government have announced their intention to invite the House of Commons to disagree. Next come the seven bills for the consolidation and amendment of a large portion of the criminal law. These bills, which effect several very important alterations in the existing system, have just passed the Commons, and remain to be considered by the Lords. Then there are two bills relating to the wills of British subjects abroad; and then the Joint-stock Companies Bill, the Highways Bill, the County Courts Consolidation Bill, the Artistic Copyright Bill, the Copyright in Designs Bill, and the Trades Marks Bill. To these must be added the Indictable Offences (Metropolitan District) Bill; which involves the following important questions—first, whether the ancient institution of the grand jury ought to be abolished as useless; or, secondly, supposing the negative, whether there is any distinction in this respect between grand juries in the metropolis and grand juries in the provinces. There are also the bill, introduced by Mr. Locke, to extend to criminal cases the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, which allow persons who conscientiously object to taking oaths to give evidence on solemn affirmation; the bill introduced by Mr. M. Smith for the limitation of Crown suits, &c.

Last, but not least, is the proposal for the removal of the courts from Westminster; the conduct of the Government respecting which is undecided and mysterious enough. Their plan is comprised in two bills, intituled respectively "The Courts of Justice Building Bill" and "The Courts of Justice Building (Money) Bill," both of which may be seen in the last number of THE JURIST (ante, p. 273); the object of the former being to enable the Crown to build a court of justice; and take the necessary land for that purpose; that of the latter, to supply funds for it. After the present session had tolerably advanced the first of these bills was brought in, when it was referred to a select committee; and it has since passed the Commons, and been sent up to the Lords, the Government declaring that it will be wholly inoperative unless the second bill passes. This second bill was brought into the Commons at the latter end of June, when it was proposed to refer it to a select committee; several members suggesting Lincoln's-inn for a site, instead of that previously fixed. This the Government resisted for a time, but afterwards yielded, and the bill has been referred to a select committee, with an important instruction to consider the question of site. Thus the matter remains.

The proposal to remove the superior courts from Westminster is not a new one. Several years ago it was proposed to transfer them to a building to be erected in Lincoln's-inn-fields; which was objected to on several grounds, and, among others, that it would have the effect of stopping up one of the lungs of the metropolis. For some time past the equity judges have sat in temporary courts erected in Lincoln's-inn. In 1858 a committee was appointed by her Majesty, under her sign-manual, to consider the matter, who reported in favour of the project, and for a site recommended a space between Carey-street and Fleet-street, specified in the first of the bills. (See the report, 6 Jur., N. S., part 2, pp. 290 et seq.) When, however, as already stated, the question was brought before the House of Commons this session, several members strongly advocated Lincoln's-inn-fields for the site, and the instruction already mentioned was added to the questions to be considered by the committee on the bill.

The superior courts have now sat at Westminster for at least six centuries; consequently that site for them has in its favour every prestige that can be derived from custom and antiquity; and it is obvious ought not to be disturbed without the clearest and most sufficient reasons. The reason assigned for the proposed change is, that this country, like some others, ought to have a "Palace of Justice"—i. e. a building in which all the principal courts of justice should be collected under one roof; the great objection to the existing state of things being, that counsel are put to great inconvenience and expense in running from one part of the metropolis to another to attend the different tribunals. But when we come to examine the Government project it will be found to fall far short of supplying a remedy for this.

Supposing the new Palace of Justice built, let us see what consequences are expected to follow. By sect. 3 of the first of these bills the purposes of both acts are declared to be "the acquisition in the same neighbourhood of a convenient site for the accommodation of the superior courts of law and equity, or some of them, the Probate and Divorce Courts, and the Courts of Admiralty and Bankruptcy, and the various offices connected with them, and of such other courts and offices for the public service as may from time to time be prescribed by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and the erection on such site of suitable buildings, with all proper furniture and conveniences, and the constructing and doing such works and things as are conducive to the attainment of the above purposes, or any of them, or incidental thereto." If this passes into law, scarcely more than one-half of the courts in the metropolis will be brought together. The highest tribunal of all—the House of Lords—will still remain at Westminster; the Privy Council at Downing-street; the Central Criminal Court at the Old Bailey, nearly two miles off; and the Middlesex Sessions at Clerkenwell-green, a still greater distance: and we confess we do not see much chance of the consolidation of these with the rest at a future time, under the general words at the end of the section, even supposing those words would embrace the case.

Another difficulty arises on that part of the second bill which proposes to raise funds for the purpose of building the proposed Palace of Justice. A majority of the commissioners recommended the appropriating certain funds for this purpose, and, among others, the Suits Fund in Chancery; and this recommendation has been adopted in the bill. The remaining commissioner, Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., objected to this as being in the nature of a breach of trust, or, at least, a misappropriation of that fund. (See 6 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 344).

One other matter remains. If these bills pass, a large building, of a national character, must be constructed; and the example of the Houses of Parliament ought to teach our rulers a lesson of caution. The original estimate for that much-vaunted edifice was only a few hundred thousand pounds, instead of which 2,500,000*l.* has already been spent, and more money is still asked for. Nor is this the worst. The building is singularly ill adapted for hearing, the stone of which it is constructed already begins to crumble away, and marks of decay are visible in several of the frescoes on the walls. In short, the Houses of Parliament are somewhat in the position of the Cathedral of Cologne—at once unfinished and a ruin; with this important difference—that the decay of the latter is legitimately from age; the decay of the former being the result of fraud or incompetency on the part of all or some of the parties employed in its construction, and, on the very mildest hypothesis, imbecility and credulity on that of their employers. A repetition of this is surely not desirable; but we have not as yet been informed whether, in the event of a new building being required for the new courts, the Government intend to take any or what securities to prevent it. At all events, it is evident that the whole question is one well deserving a most attentive consideration on the part of the Legislature—a consideration which, in the present state and circumstances of the session, it is utterly impossible it should receive.

REGULA GENERALIS.

ORDER OF COURT.—JULY 13, 1861.

The Right Hon. RICHARD BARON WESTBURY, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. Sir JOHN ROMILLY, Master of the Rolls, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir RICHARD TORIN KINDERSLEY, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir JOHN STUART, and the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir WILLIAM PAGE WOOD, doth hereby, in pursuance and execution of all powers and authorities enabling him in that behalf, order and direct in manner following:—That in all cases in which a bill of complaint shall have been or shall be ordered to be taken pro confesso against any defendant or defendants, such bill may be read at the hearing from a printed copy thereof, stamped with a proper stamp, by one of the Clerks of Records and Writs, indicating the filing of such bill of complaint, and the date of.

the filing thereof; and where such bill shall have been amended, the same may be read from a printed copy thereof, or from a copy thereof partly printed and partly written, stamped with the proper stamp, by one of the Clerks of Records and Writs, indicating the amendment of such bill and the date thereof, without the attendance of the Clerk of Records and Writs, as hath hitherto been the practice.

COMMON-LAW VACATION BUSINESS AT THE JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

July 8, 1861.

THE following regulations for transacting the business at these chambers will be strictly observed till further notice:—

Acknowledgments of deeds will be taken at half-past ten o'clock.

Original summonses only to be placed on the file.

Summonses adjourned by the judge will be heard at eleven o'clock precisely, according to the number on the adjournment file, and those not on that file previous to the numbers of the day being called will be placed at the bottom of the general file.

Summonses of the day will be called and numbered at a quarter after eleven o'clock, and heard consecutively.

The parties on two summonses only will be allowed to attend in the judge's room at the same time.

All long orders to be left, that they may be ready on being applied for the following day.

Counsel will be heard at half-past one o'clock; the name of the cause to be put on the counsel file, and heard according to number.

Affidavits in support of ex parte applications for judge's orders (except those for orders to hold to bail) to be left the day before the orders are to be applied for, except under special circumstances, such affidavits to be properly indorsed with the names of the parties and of the attorneys, and also with the nature of the application, and a reference to the statute under which any application is made, the party applying being prepared to produce the same.

All affidavits read or referred to before the judge to be properly indorsed and filed.

COSTS OF SPECIAL JURY.

THE following appears in the daily papers:—

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.—SECOND COURT.

[Sittings at Nisi Prius, before WILLES, J., and a Special Jury.]

July 6.—In a case sent over from the other court for the purpose of taking a verdict by consent, some argument took place on the propriety of allowing the costs of a special jury. The plea was one almost imputing fraud, and it was urged that a similar plea was pleaded every day.

WILLES, J.—All I can say is, that whenever I try a cause in which such a plea is pleaded without good reason, I shall always certify for a special jury against the defendant.

The plaintiff's counsel said, "It would be well that your Lordship's intimation should go forth to the world."

DISTRICT REGISTRARS OF THE COURT OF PROBATE.

We take the following from The Solicitors' Journal:—

Deputations from the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, and the Manchester, Birmingham, and Lincoln Law Societies, have had an interview with Sir C. Cresswell on the subject of the General Order, issued a short time since, respecting the business to be transacted by the registrars of the district courts of probate. In the course of the interview his Lordship intimated that any proposal for an alteration in the Order must receive the previous sanction of the Lords of the Treasury, their Lordships having, on the faith of the new Order, made their arrangements respecting the salaries of the district registrars.

In consequence of the above suggestion of Sir C. Cresswell, the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association has forwarded to the Lords of the Treasury a memorial, of which the following is a copy:—

"To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

"The humble memorial of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association sheweth—

"That the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association is composed of nearly 800 practising attorneys and solicitors in England and Wales.

"That by recent Orders of your Lordships and of the Judge of the Probate Court the district registrars of such court are required to prepare for personal applicants the necessary affidavits and evidence in support of their applications for probates and letters of administration, at a lower scale of fees to be taken for the use of the Government than that prescribed to be taken by solicitors for their own use.

"That Government has thus commenced to compete with solicitors for a portion of their professional employment, by offering to perform, by means of salaried officials, professional business for less than professional fees.

"That the result of this competition is likely to be to attract to the Government officials the whole of the non-contentious business of the court, which is vastly more in amount and importance than the contentious business.

"That for the Government to enter upon such a competition would be harsh and oppressive towards any profession or calling, and is especially so towards a profession which is highly and exceptionally taxed, and which, in respect of such excessive taxation, is entitled to receive from Government protection against all invasion of its legitimate professional functions; and yet it is believed that it is the only profession or calling with which the Government has as yet sought to compete in the acquisition and transaction of business.

"That your memorialists view with great alarm the introduction of a system which, if extended, may work great injustice and hardship on the legal and also on other professions and callings, and may very much encroach upon the independent action and freedom from officialism which have hitherto happily prevailed in this country.

"That this invasion of the practice of solicitors is a breach of the understanding upon which, on the passing of the Probate Act, on the one hand, the whole body of proctors were at once admitted as solicitors; whilst as an equivalent, on the other, the business previously transacted by proctors, of which the non-contentious is the more valuable portion, was thrown open to solicitors.

"That if the Government should still think it right to transact the business in question, it would be but just that it should do so only at the same scale of fees as are thought to be a fair remuneration to solicitors.

"That it is not advantageous to the community that facilities and encouragement should be offered to personal applications for the grants of probates and letters of administration, inasmuch as the registrars cannot, in most cases, know anything of the applicants personally, nor have any means of protection against fraud and forgery; whilst a solicitor must in every case know something, at least, of the applicants, and generally all the peculiar circumstances upon which a judgment could be formed as to the propriety of granting or refusing the application. It is quite compatible with the system of permitting personal application that probates of forged wills and grants of letters of administration to living persons may be obtained, and that without difficulty, and the funded and other personal property of the supposed deceased be realised, and the fraudulent parties have absconded with the proceeds, before the owner could be aware of the transaction. The registrar can have no means of judging whether the will produced is a genuine or a forged one, whether the supposed deceased be really living or dead, whether there be or be not a subsequent will to that propounded, nor whether the testator was sane or insane, or under undue influence; whilst, on the contrary, the solicitor, who is responsible as an officer of the court, feels it to be his duty to inquire into all these circumstances.

"That in the Manchester district registry a case has already recently happened, viz. that of Ann Dean, in which, upon personal application to the registrar, probate of a forged will has been obtained; and the present system offers every facility for the repetition of such an imposition.

"That to permit the same official, who is constituted the arbiter and judge of the sufficiency of the evidence which may be brought before him to entitle the applicant to grant of probate or administration, to be the preparer and getter up of such evidence, is inconsistent with all known systems of jurisprudence in this country, and with all correct principle, and a dangerous innovation in itself, and the duties which the registrars now have to perform under it are inconsistent and conflicting.

"Your memorialists therefore humbly pray that your Lordships will take such measures, in concert with the Judge of the Probate Court, as will prohibit the registrars from preparing, or being in anywise concerned in preparing, the evidence in support of applications for grants of probate or administration; and that in the meantime your Lordships will be pleased to direct that the fees to be taken by them for so doing shall be the same as those which are now prescribed to be taken by solicitors.

"And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

"Signed, on behalf of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association,

"J. S. TORR, Chairman.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

July 15.—The House went into committee on the Bill for consolidating the Statutes relative to Offences against the Person. An amendment was carried, that conspiracy to murder should be punishable as a misdemeanour, and not as a felony.

July 16.—Lord Palmerston stated that it was the intention of the Government to proceed with the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill, and to consider the amendments introduced by the House of Lords, with some of which they should invite the House to disagree.

The Crown Suits Limitation Bill passed through committee.

The Offences against the Person Bill was read a third time and passed.

CROWN SUITS LIMITATION.

(MR. MONTAGUE SMITH, MR. ROLT, AND MR. BOVILL).

A Bill to amend the Act of the 9 Geo. 3, c. 16, for quieting Possessions and Titles against the Crown, and also certain Acts for the like Object relating to Suits by the Duke of Cornwall.

Whereas, by an act passed in the 9 Geo. 3, c. 16, provision is made for limiting the right of the King's Majesty to sue and implead any person for or concerning lands and hereditaments, or the rents, issues, or profits thereof, and for quieting possessions and titles against the Crown: and whereas the good purpose of that act has not been fully obtained, by reason of the provisions therein relating to lands and hereditaments which have been in charge to her Majesty, or have stood insuper of record, and also by reason of certain provisions therein relating to lands and hereditaments part or parcel of honours, manors, or other hereditaments: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

SECT. 1. The Queen's Majesty, her heirs and successors, shall not at any time hereafter sue, impeach, question, or implead any person or persons for or in anywise concerning any manors, lands, tenements, rents, tithes, or hereditaments whatsoever (other than liberties or franchises) which such person or persons, or his or their, or any of their, ancestors or predecessors, or those from, by, or under whom they do or shall claim, have or shall have held or enjoyed or taken the rents, revenues, issues, or profits thereof by the space of sixty years next before the filing, issuing, or commencing of every such action, bill, plaint, information, commission, or other suit or proceeding as shall at any time or times hereafter be filed, issued, or commenced for recovering the same, or in respect thereof, by reason only that the same manors, lands, tenements, rents, tithes, or hereditaments, or the rents, revenues, issues, or profits thereof, have or shall have been in charge to her Majesty, or her predecessors or successors, or stood insuper of record, within the said space of sixty years, but that such having been in charge, and such standing insuper of record, shall be, as against such person and persons, and all claiming by, from, or under them, or any of them, of no force and effect.

2. And whereas an act was passed in the session held in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 105, "for quieting titles within the county of Cornwall as against the Duchy of Cornwall, and other purposes:" and whereas another act was passed in the session held in the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 53, "for the limitation of actions and suits by the Duke of Cornwall in relation to real property, and for other purposes:" and whereas it is expedient that the limitation applicable to actions and suits by the Crown should be made applicable to actions and suits by the Duke of Cornwall: be it enacted, that the provisions of this act hereinbefore contained applicable to the Queen's Majesty shall extend and be applicable to the Duke of Cornwall, and to the said two last-recited acts, in the same manner as if the Duke of Cornwall were hereinbefore mentioned or referred to where the Queen's Majesty is mentioned or referred to; and this act shall be construed together with, and be deemed to form part of, the said two last-recited acts.

3. The Queen's Majesty, her predecessors and successors, shall not be held, deemed, or taken, for the purposes of the said act of the 9 Geo. 3, c. 16, to have been answered the rents, revenues, issues, or profits of any lands, manors, tenements, rents, tithes, or hereditaments which shall have been held or enjoyed, or of which the rents, revenues, issues, or profits shall have been taken, by any other persons or person, by the space of sixty years next before the filing, issuing, or commencing of any such action, suit, plaint, information, commission, or other suit or proceeding for recovering the same, or in respect thereof, as in the said act is mentioned, by reason only of the same lands, manors, tenements, rents, tithes, or hereditaments having been part or parcel of any honour or manor or other hereditaments of which the rents, revenues, issues, or profits shall have been answered to her Majesty, or her predecessors or successors, or some other person under whom her Majesty hath or lawfully claimeth, or shall hereafter have or lawfully claim, as aforesaid, or of any honour, manor, or other hereditaments which shall have been duly in charge to her Majesty, her predecessors or successors, or stood insuper of record as aforesaid.

DIVORCE COURT.—The applications to have the marriage knot untied, or cut, do not much diminish, though the arrears of past years ought by this time to be getting few. The returns just published shew that in the year 1860, 212 petitions were filed for dissolution of marriage, only one less than in 1859; and there were 62 petitions for judicial separation, 18 less than in the previous year. There were 13 applications for restitution of conjugal rights in 1860; 141 causes were tried. The fees received amounted to 2490*l.*—Times.

The Right Hon. Sir William Erle, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed William Thrush Jefferson, Gent., of Northallerton, Yorkshire, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women in and for the North Riding of the county of York.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 27, 1861.

It has been decided by the House of Lords, in the important case of The President and Scholars of St. Mary Magdalen, Oxford v. The Attorney-General (6 H. L. C. 189)—reversing the decision of Sir J. Romilly, M.R., 18 Beav. 223—in the first place, that charities are trusts within the operation of the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27; and, in the next place, that the poor are a "class of persons" within the meaning of the act, so that time will run against their claims to a charity, in the same way as it would against the claims of any individual or class of individuals, none of them labouring under any disability. It is not our intention to comment on or question the propriety of this decision; but we cannot help expressing our regret that a case of such great difficulty, affecting other cases of such deep importance to the public, especially of those persons among us who are least able to care for themselves or their interests, should have been decided by the House of Lords in the presence and by the advice of two law peers only. In The Magdalen College case, sixty years after an alienation of certain lands by the rector and churchwardens (trustees for the poor of a parish), who granted a lease for ever, at a fixed rent-charge, to Magdalen College, the House of Lords, on an information being filed to set aside the transaction, held that a suit could not be maintained (unless against the trustees), except within twenty years, the defendants to the information being purchasers for value. This case was afterwards, though evidently with some reluctance, followed by the full Court of Appeal in the case of The Attorney-General v. Davey (3 De G. & J. 136), reversing the decision of Sir J. Romilly, M.R. (reported 19 Beav. 521), and holding that the Statute of Limitations ran against the inhabitants of a parish where land had been aliened for a long and improvident lease of 500 years, at a rent which had been regularly paid, equally with the case where the alienation was in fee.

It appears to us that the two cases proceed upon the same principle, and that the Court of Appeal could not have decided otherwise without departing from the spirit of the decision in the House of Lords.

In a recent case, however, the Master of the Rolls, assuming himself to be bound by the decision of the House of Lords in The Magdalen College case, has, we venture to submit, gone a good deal beyond it. The case we allude to is that of The Attorney-General v. Payne (27 Beav. 168). It appears there, and from a former report of the case (12 Beav. 113), that Wyggeston's Hospital had been established "for the continuance and increase of pious worship, and for the greater relief and support of the poor and helpless afflicted; and that the chaplains and poor of the hospital were in May, 1572, by letters-patent, made a body corporate and politic by Queen Elizabeth, who granted to them the manors, &c., which formerly belonged to their founder. And by ordinances made in 1574, pursuant to a power contained in the letters-patent, the master of the hospital was to have full control over all the rents, &c., to conclude for the making of leases of the lands and possessions of the hospital, such lands to be leased for one, two, or three lives, and not above; and upon such leases so much rent, or more, should be reserved as had been commonly paid for the same within the space of twenty years next before such lease; that the master should employ all rents, &c., arising from the lands of the hospital (other than the fines for leases), to the only use and commodity of the hospital, and the incorporation thereof. The fines for leases the master was to take and convert to his own proper use, and to the increase of his living. He was also to have certain other stipends and emoluments. The visitors were to have power to examine the faults and misbehaviour of the master, with power to deprive him, upon cause duly heard, either for wilful and immeasurable wasting or consuming any of the lands, by reason of unprofitable and outrageous leases," &c. It appeared, moreover, that the net rental of the property of the hospital amounted to no less than 6988*l.* a year, but, by the improvident mode of letting which had been pursued, an average income of 1200*l.* a year only was produced to the charity, of which about 532*l.*, consisting of fines on renewals, were received by the master. This being the state of affairs, it appears that in 1793 one Dr. Selwyn was appointed master of the hospital; and by a lease, dated the 11th May, 1816, and made between the hospital (by its corporate name) of the one part, and one Pares of the other part, in consideration of the surrender by Pares of two existing leases, dated in 1806 and 1811, and of the rents and covenants thereinafter mentioned, the hospital demised part of the charity property to Pares for three lives, at a rent of 5*l.* 16*s.*, and some other trifling reservations. The lease was under the corporate seal, and was signed by Dr. Selwyn as master of the hospital. The rent was very inadequate, and Pares was a mere trustee for Dr. Selwyn, the master, in whose favour he immediately afterwards executed a declaration of trust. A similar lease of another part of the corporate property was made on the 3rd April, 1823, followed by a similar declaration of trust. In 1823 Dr. Selwyn died, having devised his leaseholds in trust for his daughter and her husband successively for life, with remainder amongst their children as they should appoint; and in default, amongst them equally. There were eight children of Dr. Selwyn's daughter living, and in 1828, 1839, 1842, 1843, and 1847 respectively, prior to the marriage of six of their children, one-eighth share of the leaseholds was duly appointed to each, and then settled on their respective wives, husbands, and issue. An information, alleging a case of concealed fraud, was filed, to obtain a declaration that the two leases of the 11th May, 1816, and the 3rd April, 1823, were improper and fraudulent as against the charity, and to have them set aside.

The parties entitled under the settlements claimed to be purchasers "for valuable consideration, without notice of any fraud or irregularity in the granting or obtaining of the two leases."

The testator's daughters and the other children claimed the benefit of the Statute of Limitations. Sir J. Romilly, M. R., held that the procuring of the leases by the master of the hospital was not a fraud, and that, after twenty years' enjoyment under them, the right of the Attorney-General to question their validity was barred by the Statute of Limitations. His Honor considered that he was bound by the decision of the House of Lords in The Attorney-General v. Magdalen College (6 H. L. C. 189), as in that case there had been a complete breach of trust, with complete notice to the alienees of the breach of trust; that the only difference between that case and the one before him was, first, that in the former there was an alienation of the fee, whereas in the latter the alienation was merely for a term of years. This distinction we agree with his Honor in thinking clearly immaterial. But his Honor goes on to say, "that the next difference is, that the grantors in The Attorney-General v. Magdalen College were the rector and churchwardens; here the grantor, in form, was the hospital itself, though, in substance, I have no doubt it was the master." "Again," he adds, "in The Magdalen College case the alienation was to a stranger; here it was to a trustee for the master." His Honor thought the character of the alienees could not affect the question where adverse possession began. "If," he said, "the alienee in The Attorney-General v. Magdalen College had been the rector, it is obvious that the question now before me, and that before the House of Lords, would be exactly the same." And after admitting this, which appears to us to constitute an essential distinction between the two cases, his Honor nevertheless adds, "that he cannot distinguish the case from The Attorney-General v. Magdalen College;" and he decided, that as soon as the leases were granted adverse possession began; that there were persons then in existence who had a right of suit; and that consequently the Statute of Limitations was a bar to the information.

It appears to us that the most important question in this case is, whether, in taking leases to a trustee for himself, the master of the hospital was not, under the circumstances, guilty of a fraud. We think that he was, and that the case ought not to have been treated as one merely of a breach of trust on the part of the corporation.

It is true, that the lease apparently is granted by the corporation; but it appears from the report of the case of The Attorney-General v. Wyggeston's Hospital (12 Beav. 115), to which we have before alluded, that the master of the hospital had the power of leasing, or rather, to use the words of the ordinance, "of concluding for the making," i. e. bargaining for the making, of leases; and that it must, without doubt, have been intended by the framers of the ordinance that the lands should be let for substantial rents; else why should they contain provisions against the master "granting unprofitable and outrageous leases?" The lease was signed by Dr. Selwyn, as master of the hospital; and even the Master of the Rolls admits that in substance it was the lease of the master. The question then is, whether a person, having a power of a fiduciary character, can either exercise it in his own favour, or can he, when he ought to have exercised it for the benefit of those on whose behalf he was intrusted with such power, lie by, and allow or induce others, whom he ought, by the due exercise of his power, to have controlled, to neglect the interests of those whom he was bound to protect, and obtain thereby an advantage for himself? We think, according to the principles laid down in all the cases of any authority upon this subject, that he could not. In The Attorney-General v. The Earl of Clarendon (17 Ves. 500), where the governors of a charity let part of the lands to one of their own body, Sir W. Grant, M. R., said, that "according to the general rule which the Court adopts for the purpose of guarding against possible fraud, he could not become a lessee of the lands, which, as governor, it was his duty to let to the highest advantage." It is true, that in The Attorney-General v. Payne the master of the hospital was not one of the corporation, but he had a power of leasing, or of concluding to make leases; and it was his duty to lease and let the charity lands to the greatest possible advantage to the hospital, and not to have obtained, as he did, the greatest possible advantage to himself.

The transaction being, as we think, a concealed fraud, the statute would only run from the time of its discovery. (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 25).

The decision of Lord Cottenham, when Master of the Rolls, in Charter v. Trevelyan (4 L. J., Ch. 209), affirmed by the House of Lords (11 Cl. & Fin. 714), does not appear to have been brought before the attention of the Master of the Rolls. It has, we think, a very material bearing upon the subject now under discussion. In that case, a person standing in the fiduciary position of solicitor, steward, and receiver of rents to the vendor of an estate, without the knowledge of the vendor, by means of the intervention of a trustee, purchased the estate for himself. Lord Cottenham held, in the first place, that such transaction amounted to a fraud; and, in the next place, that time only began to run against the injured party from the discovery of the fraud, and not merely from the time when it was committed.

The principles upon which Lord Cottenham and the House of Lords acted in Charter v. Trevelyan appear to be applicable in every respect to the case of The Attorney-General v. Payne. It is true, that in setting aside transactions of this kind, great hardships are inflicted upon innocent individuals. But the words of Lord Cottenham in Charter v. Trevelyan, adopted, with strong commendation, by the late Lord Campbell in the House of Lords, should always be borne in mind:—"In cases of fraud time is no bar, otherwise justice would be defeated, not because the case was not a proper one for the interference of the Court, but because deception was continued by the author of the fraud so long as to entitle him to reap the benefit of it. It is fitting that those who thus appropriate the property of others should be assured that in this court no time will secure to them the fruits of their dishonesty, but that their children's children will be compelled to restore the property of which their ancestors have fraudulently possessed themselves. Time is no bar, except the party, having full information of his injuries and rights, allows time to elapse without seeking relief."

MR. EDWIN JAMES, Q. C.

THE following appears in The Times of the 19th instant:—

"Yesterday evening, at a parliament held, after many adjournments, Mr. Edwin James, Q. C., was disbarred by the Benchers of the Inner Temple, and that fact was ordered to be communicated to all the judges of law and equity, and the other three Inns of Court."

And in the same paper, on the 21st, the following:—

"To the Editor of The Times."

"Sir,—I beg to inform you that I have, by the instructions of Mr. Edwin James, given notice to the Benchers of the Inner Temple that it is his intention to appeal to the judges against the order made by them at their sitting on the evening of the 18th instant.

"I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

"W. E. KNOBEL.

"3, Cannon-row, Whitehall, July 20."

THE GRAND JURY SYSTEM.

THE following letter appears in The Times of the 18th July, addressed to the editor, and headed "Middlesex Sessions Grand Jury:—"

"Sir,—As one of the grand jury at the present sessions, may I ask you to give publicity in your columns to the accompanying protest, agreed to by all the jurymen (eighteen in number) at the close of our duties yesterday? The protest was read in court, the judge at the same time expressing his entire acquiescence therewith.

"I have the honour to be, &c.,

"JOHN TAYLOR.

"5, Shrubland-grove West, Dalston, N. E.,
July 17.

"The grand jury cannot separate without expressing their opinion, that no necessity appears to them to exist for the continuance of the duties of the grand jury, all the cases laid before them at this session having already been fully investigated by a stipendiary magistrate, and which preliminary inquiry appears to them all-sufficient (checked as the absoluteness of the power is by the press) to preserve a prisoner from being unduly or unfairly placed on his trial, without the intervention of a grand jury, the machinery of which seems to be useless for the purpose of justice, and alike troublesome and expensive to prosecutors, witnesses, and jurymen."

There is nothing new in this. For many years past the grand juries of the Middlesex Sessions have been in the habit of making presentments, voting themselves a nuisance, and praying for their own abolition; and at the present moment Lord Chelmsford's bill for allowing persons in the metropolis, in certain cases, to be put on trial without the intervention of a grand jury, is being discussed in the House of Commons. (See ante, p. 83). The authors of the above protest, however, and, as they allege, the judge of the Middlesex Sessions also, would go farther, and do away with the system altogether, on the ground that a previous investigation of each case by a stipendiary magistrate (appointed and removeable, be it remembered, at the pleasure of the Crown) is quite sufficient guarantee against persons being improperly put on their trial—a proposition, the unconstitutional and dangerous character of which we have adverted to on previous occasions. (Ante, p. 83; 6 Jur., N. S., part 2, pp. 359, 367). But the institution of the grand jury rests also on another ground, of which the authors of the above protest are either ignorant or deem unworthy of their notice; namely, that it affords a means, and the only means, to private individuals for putting the criminal law in motion against offenders, whether they be officers of Government or not, and however agreeable or distasteful their prosecution may be to the Executive.

It is urged by some that grand juries are beneficial in the provinces, but not in the metropolis, on the ground both of the presence of stipendiary magistrates in the latter, and also that the persons composing the grand juries there are taken from a lower walk of life, and much inferior both in education and intelligence to those in the provinces; and indeed, if we are to judge from the language and composition of the protest before us, especially that portion in the parenthesis, there is some colour for the hypothesis. That evils exist in the constitution of the metropolitan grand juries must be freely admitted, but they are such as are easily susceptible of remedy without sweeping away the system; namely, by reforming the mode of summoning those juries, and by extending the salutary provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, to all bills of indictment preferred by private individuals, where there has been no previous investigation of the case by a magistrate.

CRIME AND CRIMINALS.

THE two following articles on these subjects are taken from The Times of the 10th July and 12th July respectively:—

The annual volume of "Judicial Statistics for England and Wales" has just been issued. It is for the year ending at Michaelmas last. The police return the number of crimes (indictable offences) committed in the year, so far as known to them, at 50,405—a decrease of 3·1 per cent. on the returns of the previous year. This black catalogue includes 99 murders, 38 attempts to murder, 466 cases of shooting at or wounding persons with intent to do them bodily harm, 188 of manslaughter, 174 attempts at suicide (and coroners' inquests were held on 1357 persons who committed suicide), 142 unnatural crimes or misdemeanours, 109 instances of bigamy, 476 criminal assaults on women, with a long list of more ordinary crimes. The number of persons apprehended for these crimes is stated at 24,862, or 49·3 per cent. upon the crimes, which is a rather less proportion of apprehensions than in 1859. 8659 of these persons—more than a third—were discharged by the magistrates, leaving 16,203, or 32·1 per cent., as the proportion of cases successfully pursued by the police—nearly the same proportion as in 1859. Such, at least, is the representation made in this volume, compiled at the Home Office; but, high as that authority is, it does not seem at all clear that this is the true proportion of the detections to the crimes; for it is probable that, besides these apprehensions (which appear to be only those on which the accused were either sent for trial or discharged), many persons apprehended for the lighter of these indictable offences were sentenced by the magistrates, and so included in the list of cases dealt with summarily. 384,918 persons were charged summarily before the magistrates (a decrease of 2 per cent. on 1859), and about two-thirds—255,803—of them were convicted. The sentences passed shew that these summary convictions were for the less serious offences; in nearly two-thirds of the cases—165,165—the sentence was a fine, and in only 53,330 (20·8 per cent.) imprisonment, which in 34,745 instances was for not more than a month. The women had their usual good fortune, for only 55·1 per cent. of the charges against them succeeded, while 69·4 per cent. of the men were convicted. Of the persons thus proceeded against summarily, 88,361 were charged with drunkenness—a decrease of 1·7 per cent. on 1859. The charges of aggravated assaults on women were 2948—a decrease of above 7 per cent. The charges for offences against the game laws were 8654—an increase of 4·8 per cent. The whole number of persons proceeded against during the year, whether by indictment or summarily, was 409,780, and it was made up in the following rather remarkable way:—137,574 were persons of previous good character, 144,485 were unknown to the police, and only 127,721 (less than a third) were persons of bad, suspected, or known loose character. The police to deal with these were 20,760 in number—a very trifling increase on the previous year; if the number of the force was the same half a year later, when the census was taken, it is one policeman to every 966 persons. The force was maintained at a cost of 1,531,111. The police return a decrease in the number of the known criminal classes to the extent of 3·5 per cent. as compared with 1859; and a decrease of 8·4 per cent. among persons under sixteen. The houses of bad character, 24,711, are 5·9 per cent. fewer than in 1859. The number of thieves at large, known to the police, is stated to be 37,914; and charges were brought against 19,864, or 52·4 per cent. It is stated also that there are 4440 receivers of stolen goods, 35,206 suspected persons, 30,900 prostitutes, 22,664 vagrants and tramps, including probably persons without visible means of subsistence—in all, 131,024 bad subjects; but it is impossible to believe that this part of the return is complete.

The commitments for trial for indictable offences are commonly taken as a measure of the amount of crime; and the year 1860 has no reason to shrink from this test, for the commitments in England and Wales fell from 16,674 in 1859 to 15,999 last year. But since the Criminal Justice Act came into operation in 1855, transferring a number of cases to the summary jurisdiction, the commitments have given a more imperfect idea of the prevalence of crime. Last year upwards of 30,000 charges of stealing, or attempting to steal, were disposed of by the magistrates. A better test may be found probably in the number of offenders sentenced to gaol by courts and magistrates; and the following short table, made up on that principle, shews the continued decrease of crime:—

Sentenced on indictments....	14,734..	15,307..	13,246..	12,470..	12,068
Sentenced to gaol by magistrates	77,712..	86,795..	83,128..	74,769..	70,151
	92,446	102,102	96,374	87,239	82,219

The capital convictions in 1860 were only forty-eight, the smallest number yet recorded. The extreme penalty of the law is virtually confined to murder, no execution having taken place for any other crime since 1841. The case which occurred in that year was for an attempt to murder, where life was seriously endangered. The average of convictions for murder in the last ten years has been seventeen, and that was the exact number in 1860. In five cases the punishment was commuted to one of penal servitude; in twelve the sentence was inflicted. It is only in these cases that we have in our statistical returns any attempt to tabulate "motives to crime." Of these murders, five are described as being for the sake of robbery, two from jealousy, one from rejected love, two from hatred, one from excitement by drink, and in one instance no motive is assigned.

PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Brougham has withdrawn for the present session his Felony and Misdemeanour Bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

July 17.—Mr. Locke's Criminal Proceedings (Oaths Relief) Bill passed through committee.

A debate ensued on a motion to go into committee on the Indictable Offences (Metropolitan District) Bill, which was adjourned till Wednesday, the 24th.

July 18.—The Government announced their intention of withdrawing the Highways Bill for the present session.

Also, instead of proceeding with the Election Law Amendment Bill, that they would merely ask for a continuance bill.

The Trade Marks Bill was also withdrawn for the session.

On the motion of the Attorney-General, the House voted, by a majority of 173 to 129, to disagree with the amendment introduced into the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill by the House of Lords relative to the appointment of a chief judge in bankruptcy. The consideration of the other amendments of the Lords was adjourned.

July 22.—The Crown Suits Limitation Bill, and the Criminal Proceedings (Oaths Relief) Bill, were read a third time, and passed.

The order of the day for resuming the consideration of the Lords' amendments in the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill having been read,

The Attorney-General said he presumed, after the decision arrived at the other night for restoring the clauses relating to the appointment of the chief judge, that the House would not now think it necessary to discuss at any length the other subsidiary amendments consequent upon that change.

Sir H. Cairns thought it would be useless to discuss the amendments which treated of the office of the chief judge.

The House then disagreed accordingly with the various amendments made by the Lords on the subject of the chief judge.

On clause 21, in which the Lords had increased the number of official assignees from five to eight,

The Attorney-General moved that the Lords' amendments be disagreed with, which, after some discussion, was carried without a division.

In clauses 22 and 27 certain amendments of the Lords were disagreed with, and some were concurred in.

Sir F. Kelly moved that the House should disagree with so much of the new clause introduced between clauses 97 and 98 as deprived debtors whose assets did not amount to 150*l*. of the power of petitioning for an adjudication in bankruptcy against themselves.

The Attorney-General seconded the motion. The effect of the clause as it now stood would be to prevent any person who might not be able to shew assets to the amount of 150*l*. from obtaining a discharge from his debts without going within the walls of a prison, and remaining there for some weeks.

Mr. Malins and Mr. Bovill also supported the motion, which was agreed to.

On clause 100,

The Solicitor-General stated that paragraph C had been inserted by the Lords, with respect to debts contracted or liabilities incurred after the passing of the act, on which considerable difference of opinion prevailed; but, with a view to the passing of the bill, he was not disposed to ask the House to disturb the principle of the amendment. The Lords, however, appeared to have overlooked the fact, that by the law as it now stood, if a debtor not a trader lay in prison, any execution creditor was at liberty to apply by petition to the Insolvent Debtors Court, and obtain a vesting order, the effect of which was to vest all the present and future estate of the debtor up to the time of his discharge, real and personal, in the assignees of the Insolvent Debtors Court, to be administered for the benefit of the creditors. He proposed, after the word "trader," to insert these words—"and not being at the time a prisoner against whom the creditors would be entitled to obtain a vesting order in insolvency if this act had not passed." With a view to carry into effect the object of the Lords in this clause, he would also add a proviso to the 164th clause, to the effect that no person shall be liable by virtue of this act to any criminal charge or penalty in respect of any matter which may have occurred before the passing of the act, to which he would not have been liable if this act had not passed. He had had the advantage of communicating these amendments to his hon. and learned friend the member for Belfast, and he was authorised to say that he had no objection to them.

Mr. Henley thought the proposal of the hon. and learned gentleman quite a fair one. It left parties as they were, and that was all that was wished or contended for.

The words proposed were then inserted.

Mr. Malins moved that the amendment introduced by the Lords in clause 101 be expunged. This was opposed by the Government, and finally withdrawn, and the House agreed to the Lords' amendment.

Clause 103 was struck out.

On clause 105, the provision added by the House of Lords, withholding jurisdiction from the county courts in towns in which district bankruptcy courts held periodical sittings, was disagreed to.

Several other amendments of the Lords, having been considered, were in some instances agreed to, and in others disagreed from.

On the motion of the Solicitor-General, a proviso was added to the 164th clause, to the effect that no person should be liable to be prosecuted for any offence after the passing of the act for which he would not have been liable to be prosecuted if the act had not passed.

On the motion of Mr. Moffatt, the House disagreed with the Lords' amendment in clause 200, making the assent of three-fourths in number of the creditors necessary to the validity of any deed executed by a debtor, and restored the clause to its original shape, by the insertion of the words, "a majority in number of the creditors representing three-fourths of the value."

Similar words were, on the motion of Mr. Moffatt, inserted in clause 208.

The remaining amendments, which were of a formal nature, having all been disposed of,

The Attorney-General moved that a committee be appointed to draw up reasons for disagreeing with the Lords' amendments, and to manage a conference with the other House.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee nominated as follows:—The Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, Sir G. C. Lewis, Sir G. Grey, Mr. Murray, and Mr. Malins.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. In 1 vol. royal 8vo., 1853, price 1l. 16s. cloth.
"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinâ malidus), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.
"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

THE BUILDINGS IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

TO HOUSE OWNERS, TRUSTEES OF ALL CLASSES, SOLICITORS, ARCHITECTS, BUILDERS, ESTATE AGENTS, &c.

The objects of this Company (the only one of the kind), as expressed in their Act, are the promoting or executing Improvements or repairs in dwelling-houses and other buildings, or the construction of any new building in substitution for, or in addition to, any existing or former building, or any drainage in connexion with building or for building purposes, or the reconstruction of any old building to which this Act applies; also all works necessary or convenient for effecting any improvements as above defined.

The Company's powers enable LIFE TENANTS, TRUSTEES OF ALL CLASSES, MORTGAGEES, REVERSIONERS, MARRIED WOMEN, TENANTS IN TAIL OR BY COURTNEY, to improve the respective properties in which they may be interested, without sinking their own money for the benefit of their successors, &c., in a prompt and inexpensive manner, repayment of the advances made being secured by a first-class rent-charge (proportioned to the actual rental) extending over any period not exceeding fifteen years.

The Company's operations embrace London and fifteen miles round; also Liverpool, Manchester, and Birmingham, and ten miles round each of those cities.

Parties availing themselves of this Company's powers are at liberty to prepare their own plans, and employ their own solicitors, builders, &c. Further information may be had by application to

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 3, 1861.

IN The Solicitors' Journal of the 27th July, 1861, we find the following:—

"The Wisbeach murder case forcibly raises a question of considerable interest, not only so far as relates to the theory of our law, but also as regards the public sentiment. A man charged with the wilful murder of his wife pleaded guilty, and repeated the plea after the most earnest and solemn warning by Mr. Justice Wightman, the presiding judge upon the occasion. The crime, as it appeared upon the depositions, admitted of no reasonable doubt, and was one of savage barbarity. In consequence of the prisoner's plea of guilty, of course no evidence was adduced; and it is impossible for the public not to participate in the regret expressed by the learned judge, and by the counsel retained by the friends of the prisoner, that he should by his plea have prevented the trial. Mr. Justice Wightman expressed the general feeling when he said that in such cases the interests of public justice are best advanced by a full and open trial; and it is certainly an important question, whether, in every case involving capital punishment, it would not be more satisfactory, even where the prisoner pleaded guilty, to have the evidence for the prosecution presented to the Court, as if no such plea had been made, and to enable the friends of the prisoner to instruct counsel to watch the case. Such a proceeding would not be by way of trial of the prisoner, but only for the satisfaction of the public, and as some guarantee that the prisoner, in pleading guilty, is not the victim of any hallucination, or any morbid notions about what is required of one in his position. Last year Lord Brougham brought in a bill to enable persons accused of crimes to obtain a trial without pleading to the arraignment otherwise than by expressing a desire to be tried upon the indictment. That bill, however, did not go the length that we suggest, as it proposed still to enable prisoners to prevent the publicity of evidence by insisting upon a plea of guilty."

The suggestion here made seems worthy of attention, although we confess we are not quite satisfied with the reasoning on which it is founded. We may also observe that it is extremely difficult to legislate so as to satisfy all parties. On the one hand, it is not uncommon, among a certain class of critics on our laws and constitution, to condemn in very strong terms the practice of our English judges in so cautiously receiving a plea of guilty, and the advice they so frequently give to the prisoner who offers one to withdraw it, and take his chance of a trial. "What!" exclaim this class of reasoners; "refuse to believe a man's confession! 'Habemus optimum testem confitentem reum.' Why compel a man to say he is not guilty when you have an acknowledgment of his guilt out of his own lips?" And, indeed, in continental countries, not only is such a plea seized on with avidity; but when the accused pleads "not guilty" he is subjected to a severe and stringent, and often most unfair, interrogation by the court, in order to extract from him admissions to his disadvantage. And absurd and mischievous as is this practice, it has its advocates, and some among us have proposed its introduction here. On the other hand, the parties whose sentiments are represented in the above extract, not content with the merciful practice of our law as it stands at present, are of opinion that a judicial confession of guilt, however free and unfettered, should not be accepted by the tribunal, lest by possibility the prisoner should injure himself through aberration of mind, unskilfulness, or imprudence.

There is probably no rule of jurisprudence more universal than that which attaches a conclusive effect to "judicial confessions." "Such," observes Professor Greenleaf*, "are sufficient to found a conviction, even if it be followed by a sentence of death, they being deliberately made, under the deepest solemnities, with the advice of counsel, and the protecting caution and oversight of the judge." And there are good reasons for the exercise of caution in receiving such a plea, however superfluous, or even absurd, it may appear to superficial thinkers. Let it be remembered that every confession of guilt in general terms is a "confessio juris" as well as a "confessio facti;" and however plausibly it may be urged that a man must, in most cases at least, know what he has done in point of fact, it by no means follows that he is correct in his view of the law respecting it. Thus, a man really guilty of manslaughter might plead guilty to a charge of murder; or a man who committed an homicide might injure himself in a like manner by not knowing that the act he did was of a justifiable or excusable, and not of a felonious nature, &c. To this must be added the possibility of false confessions of guilt arising from mistake of fact; aberration of mind; or improper influence, in the shape of threats or menaces, to induce confession, &c. Perhaps, for these reasons, therefore, it might be an improvement in our law if, whenever the judge is not satisfied with the truth of a judicial confession, he were empowered to enter on the record a plea of "not guilty" for the accused, in the same manner as he now can when the accused stands mute.

The bill of Lord Brougham, to which allusion is made in the extract quoted, is, we presume, the bill introduced by him in 1860, which passed the House of Lords, but was rejected by the House of Commons, on the second reading, by a large majority. Its object was to alter the present form of arraignment, by substituting for the question to the accused, "Are you guilty or not guilty?" the question, "Do you wish to be tried?" This bill was founded on an erroneous and rather sentimental notion, entertained by some well-meaning but ill-informed persons, and frequently inculcated on prisoners by the chaplains of gaols, that the plea of "not guilty" is a moral asseveration of innocence; and consequently such a plea pleaded by an accused person, who is really guilty of the offence with which he is charged, is an aggravation of his guilt, by adding to it the sin of untruth. But this arises from ignorance of the law, and misunderstanding of the whole matter. A tribunal of municipal law—at least, an English one—disclaims all right to probe the conscience of an accused person, and gives him the right of calling on those who charge him with any crime to prove, beyond all reasonable doubt, that he is guilty of it. When, therefore, he is asked by the tribunal, "Are you guilty or not guilty?" the meaning of the question is, "Do you admit what is charged against you to be true? for if so we need not try you for it;" and his answer of "not guilty" is simply this—"I do not admit what is charged against me—prove it." The objection to the plea of "not guilty," to which we have alluded, is, in truth, a verbal quibble; and it is remarkable that the form which it was proposed to substitute for it is open to another; for if that form were adopted, an accused person would be compelled to say that he "wished" or "desired" to be tried, in many cases when nothing could be farther from either his wish or desire, knowing, as he would, that such a proceeding must end in his condemnation and punishment.

On the whole, therefore, we are strongly inclined to think that our criminal procedure, erroneous as it is in some things, is free from censure in respect to its form of arraignment.

The Magisterial Formulist: being a complete Collection of Forms and Precedents for practical Use in all Cases out of Quarter Sessions, and in Parochial Matters, by Magistrates, their Clerks, and Attornies; with an Introduction, Explanatory Directions, Variations, and Notes. By GEORGE C. OKE, Assistant Clerk to the Lord Mayor of London, Author of "The Magisterial Synopsis," "The Laws of Turnpike Roads," &c. Third Edition, enlarged and revised.

[Butterworths; Hodges, Smith, & Co., Dublin. 1861.]
Stone's Practice of Petty Sessions, with the Statutes, a List of Summary Convictions, and an Appendix of Forms. Seventh Edition. By THOMAS BELL and LEWIS W. CAVE, of the Inner Temple, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. [V. & R. Stevens & Sons; H. Sweet; and W. Maxwell. 1861.]

WITH respect to the first of these, Mr. Oke is well known to the Profession as the author of a valuable work, now in its seventh edition, published in 1860, and intitled "The Magisterial Synopsis: a practical Guide for Magistrates, their Clerks, Attornies, and Constables, in all Matters out of Quarter Sessions; Summary Convictions and Indictable Offences, with their Penalties, Punishments, Procedure, &c., being tabularly arranged;" and the work before us is the third edition of a series of forms intended to accompany the former, "arranged in three like practical divisions or classes of the subjects, sub-divided into convenient chapters." We take from the author's Preface the following account of the present edition. After stating that the second edition was disposed of, and that his publishers had called on him for a fresh one, Mr. Oke proceeds thus:—

"Responding to this call, and encouraged by the great success of the 'Synopsis' (which, having passed into three editions since the previous edition of this work, is now necessarily much enlarged, and is universally used), I have been induced to extend this work in a corresponding degree, in order to render it a suitable companion to that work, by embodying in it all the various forms required under the magisterial statutes of the last five years, as well as numerous others under prior acts, the whole being thoroughly revised, as my daily experience has suggested. Many additions of parochial and other precedents have also been made at the suggestion of magistrates, magistrates' clerks, and professional men, who have expressed their opinion of the great assistance they have derived from the work, more especially magistrates' clerks, who have effected thereby a saving of fees in settling special forms, as well as in the cost of supplying their offices with those for use in the ordinary business of petty sessions. I believe that the work will now, being increased in bulk some 364 pages in excess of the previous edition, be found to contain the most comprehensive body of forms in magisterial practice that has been published, and many more than the number comprised in all the published works on the subject. I avail myself of this opportunity to thank those gentlemen who have so courteously furnished me with forms and information for this edition; and amongst those connected with public departments who have so assisted me, I may name Mr. Beverley, assistant solicitor of the Customs, Mr. Dwelly, of the Inland Revenue, and Mr. Stepney, of the Home Office."

Each of the two works forms a very thick volume octavo—that before us, in particular, consisting of nearly 1000 pages; and, it is perhaps needless to add, are excellent companions for a justice of the peace out of sessions, as well as for the other descriptions of persons for whose use they have been compiled.

The second of these works is the seventh edition of a useful little treatise. The peculiarities of the present edition are thus stated in the Preface, which is by Mr. Cave, one of the editors:—

"The time which has elapsed since this work was originally published has produced so thorough a change in the practice of the courts of petty sessions that this edition will be found to have little in common with the first. The alteration in the structure of the book, which commenced with the edition immediately following Sir J. Jervis's Acts, is carried still farther in the following pages, and it is hoped that they will be found to supply a satisfactory and complete analysis of the general practice of the court of petty sessions as it at present exists. . . . This edition was begun, and the plan of the work laid out, in conjunction with the late Mr. Bell, the precarious state of whose health during the last few months of his life, and his death before half the work was completed, have deprived these pages of very much which his intimate and practical acquaintance with the subject of which they treat would have supplied. No pains, however, have been spared to make the present edition as complete as possible; and it is hoped that, like its predecessors, it will be found to be a correct and useful guide by the magistracy and those members of the Profession who may have occasion to use it."

Mr. Cave, then, with much candour and modesty, informs us—"Great assistance has been derived, in compiling the list of summary convictions, from Mr. Archbold's Justice of the Peace and Mr. Oke's Magisterial Synopsis. Those who are desirous of fuller and further information on that immense variety of specific subjects over which justices exercise an ever-increasing jurisdiction, than can be expected from a work of the present size and pretensions, will do well to consult the two books above referred to, the latter of which is more especially valuable to the practitioner, as containing the law upon the subjects in question down to the latest period."

BUSINESS IN THE COURTS OF PROBATE, DIVORCE, &c.

We take the following from the report in The Times of Monday, the 29th July, 1861, of the proceedings in the Divorce Court on the previous Saturday:—

"The Court rose to-day for the vacation. The following summary will shew the amount of business which has been transacted since the last vacation. We are indebted to the courtesy of Mr. Billing, the clerk of the court, for the information contained in it.

"From the sitting of the Court at the beginning of last Michaelmas Term, until its rising to-day, the Judge Ordinary has dissolved 164 marriages; has pronounced ten decrees of judicial separation, and two declarations of nullity; and has dismissed twenty-five petitions. He has thus tried and determined 201 divorce suits. Fifty-nine probate causes, and two legitimacy declaration causes, have been disposed of within the same period. One of the former, Talbot v. Traherne, occupied eleven, and one of the latter, Miss Shedden's case, occupied fourteen days. These figures do not of course include the numerous interlocutory applications which are heard every Wednesday.

"At the beginning of Trinity Term the divorce list contained 153 causes, of which the Court has disposed of seventy-eight sitting alone, and of thirty-three with the assistance of juries. Several of the others have been postponed, or withdrawn by the parties; and the actual arrears are, therefore, not above thirty; and about forty new cases have been set down for trial next term.

"The act of last session, giving the Judge Ordinary power to try cases over which the full Court alone had jurisdiction before it was passed, has thus, it will be seen, already cleared off almost all the arrears; and the fact that in some of the cases lately decided the petitions were not filed until December, 1860, shews that it has also removed all ground of complaint on account of delay in the trial of causes after they are ready for hearing."

PENAL SERVITUDE, TRANSPORTATION, AND IMPRISONMENT.

MR. JUSTICE BYLES, in addressing the grand jury of Dorsetshire, at the present Summer Assizes for that county, said—

"There was a case of Joseph Walker, who would be charged with cutting and wounding a warder of Portland Prison, with intent to do him some grievous bodily harm. In that case no one saw the blow struck, but the prisoner was in such a position that it could hardly have been given by any hand but his. The conclusive evidence, however, might be his own statement; and he should take the liberty of troubling them with it for another reason. The prisoner said, 'I have nothing to say. I am very sorry for what I have done. I get so low in spirits at times, when I think of the time I have got (ten years' penal servitude), that I don't know what I am doing. I have nothing else to say.' He feared, from reading the statement of that unfortunate person, that they would entertain but little doubt that it would be their duty to find the bill; but their duty was comparatively easy. In the event of a conviction, what was to be done with him? Already he was under a sentence of penal servitude for ten years. It was no part of his duty to make remarks upon public policy, but as this was the second case that had come to his personal knowledge within four months, he could not help expressing his regret that the power of transportation was entirely taken away from the judges. He felt, and he doubted not others also felt, that with a due regard to that mercy which ought always to be shewn to prisoners, and without which sentences were cruelty, and not justice, it was impossible to give that term of imprisonment which the offence deserved; and he might say that sentences for long periods of penal servitude inflicted, in many instances, as much pain on the judge who passed them as on the prisoners who heard them. No doubt these unhappy men were put to hard labour, but not to that sort of labour which would enable them to earn their bread thereafter. At the expiration of their sentences they came out with Cain's mark upon them; for who would employ a convict or a ticket-of-leave man? Bread they must have; honest means of getting it in this rich and highly-favoured country were not easy, and the course adopted compelled them to come back to gaol. Formerly, in cases of this kind, judges were able to give that which was a most exemplary punishment—long periods of transportation. He had seen prisoners, when sentenced to such transportation, fall down from terror. They were then removed from temptation. They were employed in useful labour out of doors, and when they came out of prison, they came out without any prejudice, because there were no other labourers to be had. Their labour was very remunerative, and was highly beneficial to the colony, and they were restored to moral influences; and he could not help feeling that it was through this that our immense Australian colonies had become so great, so wonderful, and so wealthy. We owed it all to those unfortunate persons who had undergone this most beneficial punishment. It was only a few months ago that he was informed that the number of persons who had been set at liberty as ticket-of-leave men at Manchester was so great, that in the long nights no man could sleep in security from fear of burglary. They would pardon him for making these observations; he made them to gentlemen who, if they approved them upon more mature judgment, had the means of making them heard in influential quarters. The result of a long experience of thirty years in courts of criminal justice convinced him that that punishment was not only exemplary, but was healthy and effectively reformatory. Two women were charged with concealing the birth of their children. It was a crime arising from a determination to indulge the natural appetite without the observance and responsibility of married life; for he had never met with this crime in a married woman who was living with her husband—it was almost always committed by single women. And here, again, the great difficulty arose of knowing what was to be done with these women if they gave them long periods of imprisonment. Judges felt that the really guilty party was not before them."

PROCEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

July 25.—The Criminal Proceedings (Oaths Relief) Bill was, on the motion of Lord Denman, read a second time. It was supported by the Lord Chancellor and Lord Wensleydale; Lord Chelmsford expressing his doubts about the measure, but saying that he would not oppose the second reading.

The Crown Suits Limitation Bill was also read a second time.

July 26.—The Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill, as returned by the House of Commons, was taken into consideration. It was agreed, by a majority of 80 to 46, to insist on the amendments made by that House relative to a chief judge in bankruptcy. It was also agreed not to insist on its amendments relative to creditors' assignees.

The Crown Suits Limitation Bill was reported.

July 29.—The Criminal Proceedings (Oaths Relief) Bill went through committee.

The Copyright of Designs Bill and the Crown Suits Limitation Bill were read a third time and passed.

The following conversation then took place with respect to the Courts of Justice Building Bills:—

The Earl of Derby thought it but just to the right hon.

gentleman the First Commissioner of Public Works to correct an error into which he had fallen in the remarks on the state of public buildings which he had addressed to their Lordships on Friday evening. On that occasion he said that the bill for providing the money for the new courts of justice had been passed on Thursday night, or rather at an early hour on Friday morning. He had been informed since, that the bill which had been so passed was not the one which he had supposed, but the Public Offices Site Bill, and that the other measure had been dropped in the House of Commons. He presumed that the Courts of Justice Building Bill, which stood for committee in their Lordships' House, would be dropped also, as it was connected with the one which had met that fate in the House of Commons. With regard to the Law Consolidation Bills, he was glad to hear, that when they came on for the second reading, it was the intention of the noble and learned lord on the woolsack to call attention to the alterations which had been made in them since they left their Lordships' House last session.

Earl Granville observed, that the bill to which his noble friend had referred, as one which he expected to see dropped, had been read a second time.

The Earl of Derby said that the Courts of Justice Building Bill had been read a second time, because he believed it was necessary to read it a second time before the date fixed by the Standing Order as the last on which second readings could be taken; but it was distinctly understood, that in reading it a second time the House did not pledge itself to a particular site.

The Lord Chancellor remarked that the Courts of Justice Building Bill would not pledge the House to any particular site or any particular sum. With regard to the Law Consolidation Bills, he was happy to say that the alterations made in them were not very extensive. He would make a short statement as to the effect of these alterations when the bills came on for the second reading.

After a few words from Lord St. Leonards, which were inaudible in the gallery, Lord Chelmsford said that there had been a clear understanding that the House was not committed to any opinion as regarded the principle of the Courts of Justice Building Bill. That being so, he was surprised that it should be pressed forward.

The Lord Chancellor said their Lordships would perceive, on looking at the bill, that neither the neighbourhood nor the site was determined. The utility of passing it lay in the fact that some 8000*l.* or 9000*l.*, which had been expended upon the necessary surveys, would otherwise have to be repeated next year in the event of a bill being passed by the House of Commons devoting a particular sum to the erection of courts of justice. If the present bill passed this amount would be saved in case the scheme were proceeded with; and if not, the bill itself would become a dead letter.

Lord Denman believed that the proposed courts of justice, if erected, would be productive of great public inconvenience. Reversing the old rule, that "equity follows the law," all the law courts and lawyers would be obliged to follow equity to an inaccessible locality in the centre of London.

The Earl of Derby said a distinct reference was made in the bill to the plans and specifications agreed upon by the commissioners, which referred to districts and houses that were perfectly well known; and power was sought under the bill "to purchase, take, and use all or any of the houses, tenements, and buildings described in the above-mentioned plans." It was, therefore, an error to say that no particular site or neighbourhood was pointed to. Doubts and uncertainties would be excited by this measure in the minds of owners and residents in particular properties, and he thought it a very grave question whether a saving of the cost of preparing the surveys anew might not be dearly purchased by the passing of the present bill.

The Lord Chancellor, in explanation, said, that although the site might be indicated by the bill, advantage could not in any way be taken of it until the money requisite for the purpose was actually voted by Parliament.

Lord Wynford thought it highly inexpedient to proceed with this scheme in the face of a Treasury minute stating that the estimate would probably be exceeded by a million.

The matter then dropped.

July 30.—The seven Government bills for consolidating and amending a large portion of the statutable criminal law, i. e. the Offences against the Person Bill, the Larceny, &c. Bill, the Malicious Injuries to Property Bill, the Forgery Bill, the Coinage Offences Bill, the Accessories and Abettors Bill, and the Criminal Statutes Repeal Bill, were read a second time.

The Criminal Proceedings (Oaths Relief) Bill was read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

July 24.—The adjourned debate on the Indictable Offences (Metropolitan District) Bill was, on the motion of Sir G. C. Lewis (in the absence of Mr. Walpole, who has charge of the bill) postponed till Wednesday, the 31st. Sir G. C. Lewis added, he did not think it likely that the bill would pass during the present session.

The motion for the second reading of the Prosecutions Expenses Bill gave rise to a debate, which was adjourned.

July 26.—On the motion of Mr. Conner the order for the committee on the Courts of Justice Building (Money) Bill was discharged.

July 29.—The bill introduced by the Attorney-General relative to the wills and domicile of British subjects abroad passed through committee; as also did the Wills of Personality by British Subjects Bill.

Sir G. C. Lewis withdrew the Prosecutions Expenses Bill. The Corrupt Practices at Elections Preventive Act, 1854, Continuance Bill passed through committee.

July 31.—Mr. Walpole withdrew the Indictable Offences (Metropolitan District) Bill, on account of the late period of the session.

On a motion to go into committee on the Lunacy Regulation Bill, Colonel French moved, as an amendment, that the House go into committee on the bill that day three months.

Mr. Bovill seconded the amendment, which, after some conversation, was carried without a division.

The Wills and Domicil of British Subjects Abroad, &c. Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Wills of Personality by British Subjects Bill was also read a third time and passed.

The Corrupt Practices at Elections Preventive Act, 1854, Continuance Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Attorney-General moved that the House do not insist in their disagreement with the amendments made by the Lords in the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill.—Agreed to.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 10, 1861.

SINCE the extinction of the last of the Statute-law Commissions by a Parliament which thoroughly appreciated its merits, the probabilities in favour of the ultimate consolidation of the bulky and inconsistent mass of our statute law at once was materially increased. That commission being out of the way, the preliminary process of the revision of the statute-book appears to have been slowly—but, we believe, nevertheless surely—making progress; slowly, because the two gentlemen employed in the work, however great may be their industry and ability, cannot be expected to perform, except after a considerable lapse of time, what might well occupy the labours of thrice their number; surely, because we believe that those gentlemen will fairly and honestly use their best endeavours to complete the task intrusted to them in an accurate and trustworthy manner.

The important change, however, by which the Great Seal has been placed in the hands of Lord Westbury, leads us to anticipate that the revision, and ultimate consolidation, of the statute law will be prosecuted hereafter with a vigour worthy of his reputation as a law reformer, and of the great importance of the subject both to the public and to the Profession.

Looking forward with great hope to the future, let us at the same time award due praise to those who have, by preparing the materials for the Statute-law Revision Act, 1861 (which has just received the assent of the Crown), made a very important step towards the consolidation and revision of the statutes. The act is intitled "An Act for promoting the Revision of the Statute Law, by repealing divers Acts and Parts of Acts which have ceased to be in force." Its object is one which we have often insisted upon as being in this country the almost necessary preliminary to an ultimate consolidation of the statute-book, viz. "the revision of the statute law, and particularly the preparation of an edition of the statutes, comprising only enactments which are in force."

The greatest difficulty in the preparation of a new edition of the statutes doubtless arises from the slovenly mode of former legislation, which renders it difficult to determine whether an act, not expressly repealed, has been repealed by implication, or, at any rate, virtually suspended by subsequent acts or parts of acts. It was, therefore, impossible for any persons, undertaking a new edition of the statutes, to omit therefrom, on their own responsibility, any acts or parts of acts which had not been expressly repealed.

The act which has just received the royal assent consists principally of a very carefully prepared schedule, with four columns, the first shewing the act to be repealed, the second the subject of the act, and the third the extent of the repeal. In the bill there was a fourth column, for the information of Parliament (but which was struck out at a late stage of the bill), shewing the grounds of the proposed repeal.

The schedule commences with stat. 11 Geo. 3, c. 32, and comes down through the statute-book to the present time, and contains nearly 800 statutes, which are now expressly repealed. The draftsmen who prepared the Statute-law Revision Act, 1861, in an introductory preface to the bill, explaining its operation, state that acts of modern date, which have ceased to be in force without being the subject of express or specific repeal, may be regarded as divisible into, first, acts repealed in general terms; secondly, acts virtually repealed; thirdly, acts suspended, when a later act effects the same purposes as an earlier one, and thus renders the retention of the earlier one useless; fourthly, acts expired—that is, acts which, having been originally temporary, have not been made permanent, or been kept in force by continuance; fifthly, acts spent—that is, acts exhausted or spent in operation at the moment of their first taking effect, or at some specified time, or on the doing of some act authorised or required. The Statute-law Revision Act, 1861, deals only with acts of the three first classes. Where, however, part of an act dealt with in the Statute-law Revision Act, 1861, was spent or expired, that part is not excluded from the repeal; and so, where part of an act had been already expressly and specifically repealed, that part is not excluded from the repeal by the act.

In consequence of the adoption of this course, which must commend itself to every one for its simplicity and convenience, the repeals in the act are in the great majority of cases of the whole of each act dealt with, instead of being merely repeals of "so much as is not expired" or "spent," or of "so much as is not already repealed."

This being the composition and plan of the schedule, the act simply repeals the acts there enumerated, to the extent mentioned in the third column of the schedule, except as to any operation already effected by, or act done under, any enactment therein comprised, or as to any right, title, obligation, or liability acquired or accrued under any such enactment.

We presume that during the next session we shall have a similar bill presented to Parliament, which will subject to the same process all acts, or parts of acts, from the time of Magna Charta down to and inclusive of the 10 Geo. 3, which have ceased to be in force, but have not been expressly and specifically repealed.

When this is done, a very large portion of useless, but very embarrassing, matter will have been clearly swept from the statute-book.

In addition to this, we think that another process should be adopted with reference to the statutes still remaining unrepealed, the object of which should be to separate from the really general public statutes, without repealing them, those statutes which do not fairly come within that category—such, for instance, as the acts solely relating to Scotland, Ireland, India, or the colonies; and, above all, those of a purely local and personal character. Separate lists should, we think, be made of these acts preparatory to their being printed by authority of Parliament, under appropriate titles, in some separate form, or, at any rate, so that they may be eliminated from the new edition of the general and public statutes of the realm.

In the meantime, we cannot but regret that an attempt, at any rate, should not be made to print in a separate volume or part of a volume, each year, such of the statutes of the realm as are solely of a public, general, and permanent character; while the rest should be printed either together or separately, according to their real nature and character. Thus, then, would be done by the Legislature itself, each year, what, in our opinion, remains still to be done, and must be done, by the revisers and consolidators of past legislation, before it can be compressed into anything like a reasonable shape and bulk.

NEW LAW COURTS.

REMARKS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY ON THE TREASURY MINUTE OF THE 16TH JULY, 1861, RELATING TO THE PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR THE NEW LAW COURTS, WITH REFERENCE TO THE TWO BILLS NOW BEFORE PARLIAMENT.

It is much to be regretted that this "minute" was not issued at an earlier period. The facts and figures on which it purports to be founded have been for many months in the possession of the Treasury. They were well known, or were readily accessible, before authority was given by the Treasury for the preparation and deposit, at the public expense, of the plans and books of reference relative to the proposed site, and the giving of the notices required by the Standing Orders of Parliament. They were well known while the Site Bill was passing, as a Government measure, through the two Houses, and while the Money Bill was under the consideration of the select committee of the House of Commons; and yet it was not until that committee had closed its sittings and made its report, and until all opportunity of inquiry and explanation might be supposed to have passed away, that a "minute" is issued under Treasury authority, which, if its statements and reasoning be well founded, stultifies the report of a royal commission, and utterly defeats a Government measure professing to be founded thereon.

The professed object of the "minute" is, "that Parliament and the public should be fully apprised of the amount of charge which will be incurred, and the extent of liability for the same to which the public revenues may be subject," if the full scheme recommended by the royal commissioners be carried into effect.

With this view, the "minute" proceeds to shew, that whilst, on the one hand, the cost of acquiring the site recommended by the royal commissioners, and of erecting thereon the buildings proposed by them, will exceed their estimate by no less a sum than 500,000l.; on the other hand, the funds pointed out by the commissioners as available for the object will fall short of their estimate by not less than 189,000l., the two sums together amounting to 689,000l., which the "minute" represents as the "probable deficiency to be provided by vote of Parliament."

I. With regard to the cost of the site and buildings. The difference between the two estimates arises as follows:—

COMMISSIONERS' REPORT.

Cost of site . . . . .	£675,000
Ditto of buildings . . . . .	675,000
Contingencies . . . . .	150,000

TREASURY MINUTE.

Cost of site . . . . .	£750,000
Ditto of buildings . . . . .	750,000
Contingencies . . . . .	500,000

The excess of the latter over the former being thus made up as follows:—

Site . . . . .	£75,000
Buildings . . . . .	75,000
Allowance for contingencies . . . . .	350,000

Now, it is to be observed, that the Report of the Commissioners was founded upon evidence given before them, the accuracy of which has since been confirmed by an eminent architect and surveyor, who was examined before the select committee of the House of Commons, to which the Money Bill, now before Parliament, was referred. The parliamentary plans and notices for the Site Bill were prepared under the immediate personal direction of that gentleman, who has made a minute and careful estimate of every property included therein, house by house. He estimates the value of the whole, including costs of purchase and compensation, at 678,044*l*. He also confirms the estimate, that the cost of erecting all the buildings necessary for carrying into effect the entire scheme recommended by the royal commissioners, including an ample allowance for contingencies, will not exceed the sum named in their Report. On the other hand, the figures set forth in the Treasury minute are "conjectural" only. The sums there named as the probable cost of the site and buildings are expressly stated to be founded on the "conjectures" of the officers of the Board of Works; while the sum set down for "contingencies" seems to be nothing more than a guess of the Lords of the Treasury themselves, who consider that "it would not be safe to put down the item of contingencies at less than one-third of the conjectural estimate, or 500,000*l*." No actual reports or estimates are produced or referred to in support of these "conjectures," and there appears to be no good reason why any other set of figures, of even larger amount, might not with equal propriety have been put forward. The question seems to be, whether reliance is to be placed on mere "conjectures," unsupported by evidence, or on carefully-prepared estimates made by competent persons, and which have been open to examination and inquiry. And it may well be asked whether, in a matter admitted to be of the highest public utility and importance, mere "conjectures" are to be allowed to defeat a scheme recommended by commissioners, who were appointed by the Crown under the advice of one set of Ministers, and whose Report has been adopted and acted upon by their successors in office.

II. With regard to the provision of funds for the proposed new courts. The commissioners recommended the appropriation of two funds, one consisting of stock amounting to 1,492,657*l*. (or, in round figures, 1,500,000*l*.), and the other of cash amounting to 88,254*l*. At the date of their Report the price of Consols was rather more than 93, and the commissioners estimated the value of the aggregate fund, both stock and cash, at, in round figures, 1,500,000*l*. In making this calculation, they undoubtedly overlooked the fact, that a part of the stock (less, however, than a moiety) consisted of Reduced 3*l*. per Cents., which are of somewhat less value than Consols. The price of Government stock, moreover, has since fallen about 3*l*. per cent.; and, making due allowance for this depreciation, the produce of the aggregate fund, if the whole of the stock were now sold, would probably not much exceed 1,400,000*l*., as stated in the "minute." On the other hand, it must be recollected that the scheme does not contemplate or involve an immediate sale of the whole stock. The sales would be made gradually, and from time to time, as the works proceeded, and would probably be spread over a period of from five to seven years; and as it is impossible to say that, during this interval, the funds might not again advance in price, so there might thus be a considerable increase in the ultimate produce of the fund. The "minute," however, alleges that the portion of the fund which consists of cash (being that referred to in the Report as Fund E., and which, it seems, has since the date thereof increased to 105,773*l*.) is not properly available for the intended purpose, and must therefore be deducted. So deducted, and taking the present prices of Government stock as the basis of calculation, the amount actually available would be reduced to 1,311,000*l*.; and this is the only sum which the "minute" assumes to be now at the disposal of Parliament. The ground on which Fund E. is thus proposed to be struck out of the account is this—that it has arisen from surplus fees of the common-law courts; that these surplus fees are by the Nisi Prius Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 73) directed to be carried to the Consolidated Fund; and consequently that Fund E., which represents the past accumulation of such surplus, belongs by law to the Exchequer, and constitutes a portion of the general public revenue. The "minute" states, that "for some reason, which is not explained, a former Board of Treasury directed the surplus fees of the common-law courts to be retained in the hands of the Paymaster-General, and hence the accumulation of the sum described in the Report as Fund E." The explanation of the fact here referred to can be very readily supplied. When it was found that the fees taken in the common-law courts were far more than sufficient to defray the expenses for which they were avowedly levied, and that there was a considerable surplus, application for their reduction was made to the proper authorities by the Incorporated Law Society (on behalf of the general body of the Profession practising in those courts). It was represented, that, admitting it to be right to exact fees from suitors to meet the expenses, or a part of the expenses, of carrying on the business of the courts, it was a violation of every sound principle to tax them for the ordinary purposes of the State—in other words, that the administration of justice was not a legitimate subject of general taxation. The Treasury of that day admitted the justice of these representations, and while they declined to reduce the fees until it had been ascertained whether, upon an average of years, they were adequate in amount to cover current expenses, they directed the ascertained surplus to be treated as in the nature of a suspense account, and to remain in the hands of the Paymaster-General until its ultimate appropriation should be determined on. The accumulation of the surplus thus went on from year to year, until it reached the amount referred to in the Report of the Commissioners, who were unanimously of opinion that there could not be "a more legitimate application thereof than towards the completion of a scheme from which the suitors at common law will derive the most essential advantage." The argument of the "minute," that "the fees of common-law courts cannot be considered as a fund properly applicable to providing buildings for the Court of Chancery or the Court of Probate," is utterly unsound and fallacious, and is completely at variance with the whole tenor of the Report. If it were true, it would follow that, by parity of reasoning, the fees of the Court of Chancery could not properly be applied to providing buildings for the courts of law; and in that case no part of Funds B. and D.—which have arisen exclusively, the former from the profitable use of the money of suitors in Chancery, the latter from fees paid by them—would be available for the purposes of the proposed scheme. But such a conclusion would strike at the very root of the Commissioners' Report, and, if admitted, would prove, not that the fund is inadequate, but that there is no fund at all. And if this be so, then the Report of the Commissioners is a farce; the act of the Government in bringing in the two bills now before Parliament, which purport on their very face to be founded on that Report, was a mockery and a delusion; and the costs incurred in their preparation a waste of the public money. Assuming, then, that the present accumulation of the fees in question (105,753*l.*) may properly be dealt with for the purposes of the scheme, and adding that sum to the value of the stock, there would be an aggregate fund of more than 1,400,000*l.* immediately available for the proposed object, and the deficiency would be reduced from 500,000*l.* to less than 100,000*l.*

Considering the primary importance of the object—the provision of suitable courts for the administration of justice to all the subjects of the realm—it might have been thought that even the larger of these sums would, after all, have been no more than a reasonable contribution from the funds of the State; more especially as, by the execution of the proposed scheme, a very large sum, which must otherwise be expended in the erection of proper buildings at Doctors' Commons for the Courts of Probate and Divorce, including a fire-proof depository for wills, will be entirely saved. But there are other resources indicated in the Report of the Commissioners, although not included in their calculations, which will more than cover the apprehended deficiency, and effectually protect the public revenue from the risk of loss.

If the full scheme of the commissioners should be carried into effect (and this is the theory on which the Treasury minute is founded), "large and valuable blocks of buildings" (to borrow the language of the commissioners in the 107th paragraph of their Report) belonging to the public, and now used for the purposes of the equity courts and offices, would be set free, and might be brought to sale. The value of these buildings and their sites has been carefully estimated, and it amounts to no less a sum than 265,000*l.*, without including the courts of bankruptcy and insolvency, which may or may not be comprehended in the proposed scheme.

But further, in addition to the buildings referred to, the freehold of which is vested in the public, other buildings are hired for the use of the different courts and their officers, for which rents are paid to the amount of 5341*l.* 15*s.* per annum. If the proposed scheme be carried into effect, the whole of these rents will be saved, and the capitalised value of the rental thus saved has been estimated by competent authority at 145,000*l.*

If these sums be added together, the result will be as follows:—

Saving in respect of courts and offices in Doctors' Commons, no longer necessary (say) . . . . .	£100,000
Value of land and buildings set free . . . . .	265,000
Value of rents saved . . . . .	145,000

There remains to be noticed one additional item of large amount which the "minute" assumes will form a charge on the public, and which arises in the following manner:—The Funds B. and D., with which the Report proposes to deal for the purposes of the scheme, say 1,500,000*l.* stock, now produce an annual income of 45,000*l.* At the date of the Report this income was subject, to its full amount, to annual payments in the shape of compensation annuities; such charge, however, diminishing at the estimated rate of 2000*l.* per annum by the gradual falling in of the annuities. If the capital of the stock were taken for the purposes of the scheme, it would follow that the income now derived therefrom would cease; and the commissioners recommended that the public should make good the loss thereby occasioned by an annual charge on the Consolidated Fund, subject to a gradual abatement as the life compensations charged on the fund fell in. For the purpose of shewing the actual burthen which this arrangement would entail on the public, the Treasury minute treats the charge as an annuity of 45,000*l.* per annum, decreasing by 2000*l.* a year until it is extinguished in twenty-two years and a half, and it estimates the value of such annuity at 410,000*l.* Adding this sum to the deficiency of 689,000*l.* above referred to, the total charge for which the public would become liable is shewn to be 1,099,000*l.*, or, in round figures, 1,100,000*l.* The whole statement, however, on which this calculation is based may be shewn to be entirely fallacious. For, in the first place, it assumes that the whole amount of stock would be sold at once, and thus that there would be an immediate loss of income, and a consequent charge upon the public of 45,000*l.* per annum at starting. But the fact is, that the sales of stock would be gradually made as the work proceeded, and would be spread over a period of from five to seven years, during the whole of which time the dropping in of the lives of annuitants would year by year diminish the amount of the charge. But, in the next place, there is no just ground for the assumption; that, even if the whole stock were sold at once, the demand on the public would be 45,000*l.* per annum, even for a single year. One year only has elapsed since the date of the Commissioners' Report, and in that year, not 2000*l.*, but 5000*l.* has been saved to the income of the fund by the falling in of compensation annuities; thus reducing the charge to 40,000*l.* per annum, being the same sum as that assumed by the commissioners, on grounds somewhat different, but the validity of which, the results being the same, we need not stop to discuss. From this sum of 40,000*l.* the commissioners proposed to deduct the surplus fees received in the courts of common law, the Court of Probate, and the High Court of Admiralty, amounting together to 24,000*l.* per annum, and which, as they were received by the public, they conceived might be fairly and properly set off against the new charge thrown on the public by means of the proposed scheme, and which would thereby be reduced to 16,000*l.* per annum. The propriety of this deduction is challenged by the Treasury minute, on grounds the validity of which has already been discussed in a former part of this paper, when dealing with the question of the applicability of Fund E. to the objects of this scheme. There are those who contend that no taxes or fees should be taken from suitors upon any pretext or for any purposes; and this was the opinion expressed by the Master of the Rolls not many days since, in his evidence before the select committee of the House of Commons on the pending bill. His Honor on that occasion referred to "the very celebrated pamphlet of Mr. Jeremy Bentham on law taxes, which produced so great a sensation, and put an end to making the courts of law a source of revenue to the public;" and his Honor added, that the reasoning of the pamphlet "applied pre-ciously to the taxes now levied, though essential to the maintenance of the courts as at present established."

Without adopting this opinion to its full extent, and admitting that fees may properly be levied on suitors in order to aid in maintaining the courts whose aid they invoke, it is conceived that no one can be found at this time of day to assert that suitors, as such, should be taxed, whether by fees or otherwise, for the general purposes of the State. And yet this would be the obvious result if the propositions put forward in the "minute" were to be carried into practical effect.

If, then, the surplus fees, hereafter to be received in the courts of law and of probate, are brought in aid of the scheme, the result to the public will be as follows:—It appears, from the Treasury minute, that the surplus for the last year was—

From courts of law . . . .	£17,519
From the Probate Court . . . .	29,000
	£46,519

There is no reason to anticipate any falling off from either source, the probability being the other way. But, assuming that the fees remain stationary, it is manifest that there would be no demand on the public, even on the hypothesis that the whole stock, constituting Funds B. and D., were immediately sold, and the whole income of 45,000*l.* per annum, now arising therefrom, were at once to cease.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1861.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations; and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No students shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Michaelmas Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Wednesday, the 23rd day of October next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Wednesday, the 30th day of October next, and will be continued on the Thursday and Friday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Wednesday morning, the 30th October, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Thursday morning, the 31st October, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Friday morning, the 1st November, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Friday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

THE READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW and LEGAL HISTORY will expect the candidates for honours to be well acquainted with the origin and progress of our Laws and Constitution, as explained in chap. 8, part 3, of Hallam's History of the Middle Ages.

He will expect them to be well acquainted with the most important provisions of the Great Charter (on which they will find an excellent commentary in Sullivan's Lectures, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, pp. 343 to 381); with the chapters in Hallam's Constitutional History which contain an account of the Reigns of Henry VIII, Elizabeth, the Stuarts, William III, and Anne; with the State Trials of persons eminent in our history, from the time of Mary to the accession of Anne; with the History of the Law of Treason, Libel, and of the Tenure of Land.

He refers those candidates especially to May's History; the first volume of Lord Clarendon's History; the 26th, 27th, 28th, and 29th chapters in the third volume of Lord Brougham's Political Philosophy; to the close of the 23rd chapter of Hume's History, vol. 8, p. 296, 8vo. ed., the passage beginning, "Thus have we pursued the History of England," &c.; to the third volume of Millar's History; to the Preface to Gilbert on Uses, by Lord St. Leonards; the Preface to the State Trials; the 33rd chapter of the fourth volume of Blackstone's Commentaries (edition in which the text is preserved); to the 6th chapter in the fourth volume of Kerr's Blackstone; chapters 1, 2, and 3 of Mr. Justice Foster's work on the Crown Law; to the second volume of Parliamentary History; to the State Trials, vol. 9, pp. 817, 488; vol. 8, p. 549; vol. 3, p. 826; and Vaughan's Reports, p. 135.

All candidates will be expected to know the principal events in English History from the Conquest to the Accession of George III; to have an accurate knowledge of the Reigns of the Stuart Kings, of Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, the Bill of Rights, the Law of Treason, and the Act of Settlement.

The READER ON EQUITY proposes to examine in the following books:—

1. Haynes's Outlines of Equity; Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence; Hunter's Elementary View of the Proceedings in a Suit in Equity, part 1.

2. The Cases and Notes contained in the first volume of White & Tudor's Leading Cases; the Act to further amend the Law of Property and to relieve Trustees, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35; the Act to further amend the Law of Property, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38; the Act to give to Trustees, Mortgagees, and others, certain Powers now commonly inserted in Settlements, Mortgages, and Wills, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145; the General Orders of the Court of Chancery of the 1st February, 1861, and of the 5th February, 1861 (7 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 58); Mitford on Pleadings in the Court of Chancery—Introduction, c. 1, ss. 1, 2; c. 1, s. 3 (the first six pages); c. 2, s. 1; c. 2, s. 2, part 1 (the first three pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 2 (the first two pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 3; and c. 3.

Candidates for certificates of having passed a satisfactory examination will be expected to be well acquainted with the books mentioned in the first of the above classes.

Candidates for a studentship or honours will be examined in the books mentioned in the two classes.

The READER ON REAL PROPERTY LAW proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

1. Joshua Williams on the Law of Real Property, 5th ed.

2. A Vendor's Lien for Unpaid Purchase Money—Mackreth v. Symmons (15 Ves. 336), and the Notes to that case in 1 White & Tudor's Leading Cases in Equity, 194; Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, 478-487, 3rd ed.

3. The Law of Incorporeal Personal Property, including Personal Annuities, Stocks, Shares, Patents, and Copyrights—Joshua Williams on Personal Property, 164-212, 4th ed.

4. The Rights and Liabilities of Tenants for Life of Freehold Estates—Levis Becker's case (Tudor's Leading Cases in Conveyancing, 19-69).

PROSPECTUS OF THE LECTURES

To be delivered during the ensuing Michaelmas Educational Term, by the several Readers appointed by the Inns of Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

The Reader will pursue the History of our Constitution from the Death of James I to the Accession of George III. He will trace the progress and varieties of judicial opinion, as it affected the interpretation of Law—the Law of Real Property, the Law of Evidence, the Law of Libel, the Criminal Law, and the Doctrines of Equity; and he will point out the changes and growth of the Statute Law during the same period.

In his Private Classes he will continue to explain the History of our Constitution, and to point out its gradual progress during the Reigns of the Stuarts.

The books to which he will refer are—Blackstone's Commentaries, by Kerr—Millar's History—Lord Brougham's Political Philosophy, vol. 3—Coke's Reports—Hallam's Constitutional History—Rapin's History of the Period—Appendices to Hume's History—State Trials of the Period—Statute-book of the Period—Fortescue (Amos)—Parliamentary History—Clarendon's Life and History—May's History—Starkie's Law of Libel—Greenleaf on Evidence—Ralph's History and Memoirs—Coke's Institutes—Foster's Crown Law—Brodie's History—Memoirs of Ludlow, Hutchinson, Whitelocke, Burnet, Luttrell, and Warwick—Neale's History of the Puritans—Calmy's Baxter—Halifax's Works—Somers's Tracts—Milton's Prose Works—Thunloe's Correspondence—Harris's Lives.

EQUITY.

The Reader on Equity proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Six Lectures:—

1. On the History and Constitution of the Court of Chancery.
2. On the Great Seal.
3. On the Legal Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery.
4. On Pleadings and Procedure in the Court of Chancery.
5. On the Limits of the Equitable Jurisdiction. The Court of Star Chamber.
6. On the Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords.

The Reader on Equity proposes to form two Private Classes, a Senior and Junior, according to the amount of preliminary knowledge possessed by the Students; using, in the Junior, Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence as a text-book; and, in the Senior, examining the principal branches of Equitable Jurisdiction, with a frequent reference to cases; and also commencing the perusal of Lord Redesdale's Treatise on Equity Pleadings.

THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

The Reader on the Law of Real Property proposes to deliver, in the ensuing Educational Term, Six Public Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. Composition Deeds between Debtors and Creditors.
2. Powers and Trusts for Sale.
3. The Law of Dower, Freebench, and Curtesy.

In his Private Classes the Reader on the Law of Real Property will refer particularly to the more important cases cited in the Public Lectures. He will also endeavour to go through a course of Real Property Law, using the work of Mr. Joshua Williams as a text-book.

JURISPRUDENCE AND THE CIVIL LAW.

The Reader on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law proposes, in the ensuing Educational Term, to deliver Six Public Lectures on—

1. The Continental and Civil Jurisprudence relating to the Property of Married Women.
2. The Fundamental Principles of International Law.

With his Private Class the Reader proposes to commence a complete course of Roman Law, taking the Institutiones of Warnkönig as his text-book.

COMMON LAW.

The Reader on Common Law proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Six Public Lectures as under:—

The First Lecture will be Introductory to the Study of the Law.

The Five succeeding Lectures will be devoted to the Subjects under mentioned:—

1. The Principles of our Common Law, what they are, and whence derived.
2. Tribunals which administer the Common Law.
3. The Three Leading Departments of Common Law—viz. Contract, Tort, and Crime—will be defined and considered.

With his Private Class the Reader proposes to examine the Principles of our Common Law, the Constitution and Jurisdiction of the Courts which administer it, and the classification of matters within its cognisance. He will use as text-books, and for reference, the most recent editions of the following works:—Stephen's Commentaries, Broom's Legal Maxims and Commentaries on the Common Law, and Smith's Leading Cases.

By order of the Council,

RULES AND REGULATIONS

FOR CONDUCTING THE EXAMINATIONS UNDER THE ATTORNIES ACT, 23 & 24 VICT. C. 127.

As to Examinations in General Knowledge.

IN pursuance of the act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the twenty-third and twenty-fourth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Attornies, Solicitors, Proctors, and Certificated Conveyancers," we, the Right Hon. Sir Alexander James Edmund Cockburn, Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench; the Right Hon. Sir John Romilly, Master of the Rolls; the Right Hon. Sir William Erle, Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas; and the Right Hon. Sir Frederic Pollock, Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, do hereby, for the purpose of carrying the said act into effect, order and direct as follows:—

I. In order to carry into effect the 5th section of the said act, we do hereby order and direct, that from and after the first day of Hilary Term, 1862, every person who before entering into articles of clerkship shall produce to the registrar of attornies a certificate that he has successfully passed the first public examination before moderators at Oxford, or the previous examination at Cambridge, or the examination in arts for the second year at Durham, or the matriculation examination at the universities of Dublin or London, and has been placed in the first division on such matriculation examination, shall be entitled to the benefit of the 5th section of the Attornies Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127.

II. And in order to carry into effect the enactment in the 8th section of the said act, we do hereby further order and direct, that from and after the first day of Hilary Term, 1862, every person proposing to enter into articles of clerkship, not having been called to the degree of utter barrister in England, or not having taken a degree, or passed the examination prescribed under the 5th section of the act, shall produce to the registrar of attornies a certificate that he has successfully passed an examination by special examiners appointed by us, and that such last-mentioned examination be held at such times and places as the examiners shall from time to time appoint, and consist of two parts.

PART I.

1. Reading aloud a passage from some English author.
2. Writing from dictation.

3. English grammar.
4. Writing a short English composition.
5. Arithmetic—a competent knowledge of the first four rules, simple and compound.
6. Geography of Europe and of the British Isles.
7. History—questions on English history.
8. Latin—elementary knowledge of Latin.

PART II.

Each candidate shall offer himself for examination in one of the following subjects:—

1. Latin.
2. Greek, modern or ancient.
3. French.
4. German.
5. Spanish.
6. Italian.

If the examiners conducting such examinations under Part I be satisfied with the proficiency shewn by the candidate, they will sign a certificate to the following effect:—

"We certify that A. B. has been examined in general knowledge by us [or under our direction, in case the examination shall be conducted in the country], as required by the Rules and Regulations of the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Master of the Rolls, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, and we certify that he has passed a satisfactory examination."

If the examiners conducting the examination under Part II be satisfied with the proficiency shewn by the candidate, in the language in which he has been examined, they will sign a certificate to the following effect:—

"We certify that A. B. has been examined by us in the — language [as the case may be], and we certify that he has passed a satisfactory examination."

With respect to candidates residing in the country, their examination may be conducted by the transmission by the examiners of papers to some person or persons to be appointed by them for that purpose, in certain towns to be selected in England and Wales, who shall call the candidates before them at convenient times, to be fixed by the examiners, and require them to give written answers in the presence of the persons so appointed, who shall then seal up and send to the examiners in London the answers so written<sup>o</sup>.

The persons so appointed to be remunerated out of the fees to be paid on receiving their certificates by the candidates examined in the country†.

Each person examined in London, on receiving his certificate, to pay the fee of 1*l*.; and each person examined in the country, on receiving his certificate, to pay the fee of 2*l*. to the Council of the Incorporated Law Society.

As to Intermediate Examination.

III. And in order to carry the enactment in the 9th section of the said act into effect, we do hereby further order and direct—

1. That all persons under articles of clerkship executed after the 1st day of January, 1861, shall be examined either in one of the two terms next before, or one of the two terms next after, one-half of his term of service, in such elementary works on the laws of England as may be appointed by the examiners, and in bookkeeping; and that the names of the books selected for examination in each year may be obtained from the secretary of the examiners in the month of July in the previous year.

* This direction of course does not apply to reading aloud, as to the proficiency in which of each candidate the person or persons selected must give a certificate.

† The fees of the examiners will be hereafter fixed, according to the number of candidates.

2. That such intermediate examination shall be conducted in each term by the examiners appointed under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 23, the Orders of the Master of the Rolls of the 13th January, 1844, and the Rules of the Common-law Courts of Hilary Term, 1853, at such times and places as the examiners shall from time to time appoint.

3. That the applicant for such examination shall give to the secretary of the examiners one month's notice in writing, and leave with him the articles and assignment (if any), duly stamped and registered, under which the applicant is serving his clerkship, with answers to the questions as to his due service and conduct up to that time.

4. That upon compliance with such regulations, if the major part of the examiners present at and conducting such examination shall be satisfied with the answers of the person so applying in the subjects wherein he shall be so examined, the examiners, or the major part of them, shall certify the same under their hands in the following form:—

"In pursuance of the Rules and Regulations made by the Lords Chief Justices of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, jointly with the Master of the Rolls, we, being the major part of the examiners conducting the 'intermediate' examination of A. B. of —, do hereby certify that we have examined him as required by the said Rules and Regulations; and we do certify that his answers to the questions are satisfactory. Dated the — day of —."

5. That in case the applicant should fail to pass such intermediate examination to the satisfaction of the examiners, he may attend the examination in the next or any subsequent term; but if he should not have passed such intermediate examination before the expiration of the second term next after one-half of his term of service, his examination at the expiration of the term of service under his articles shall be postponed for such length of time, or so many terms, as may intervene between such last-mentioned term and his successfully passing such intermediate examination, or for such shorter time as the examiners shall in each case direct.

6. That each person, on giving the notice and complying with the requisitions in clause 3, shall pay a fee of 5*s*., and on receiving his certificate for such intermediate examination, shall pay a fee of 15*s*. to the Council of the Incorporated Law Society.

Dated the 26th day of July, 1861.

CONCLUSION OF A WILL.

WE take from The Solicitors' Journal of the 20th instant the following form of attestation to a will, which, together with the appended directions and reasons for its use, it professes to have received from an eminent conveyancer:—

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand the day and year first above written (a).

(Signed) "HUGH JONES

"The above writing contained in this and the — preceding sheets of paper having been signed by A. B. of —, as his last will, in the presence of us present at the same time, we, without quitting his presence, do attest and subscribe the same in the presence of each other, the [5] alterations against which respectively the letter 'A' is placed having been first made."

(a) As it is often necessary, when a will has come into operation, to ascertain the date and the names of the executors, those facts should be placed first, that they may be found at once, without any turning over of the sheets composing the document.

The attestation clause should not be written in a corner, as it usually is, but across the page, and immediately under the signature of the testator; for the witnesses are to subscribe the will, of which the signature of the testator is part.

It is incorrect in the attestation clause to refer to "the said testator," for the witnesses are not supposed to have any knowledge of what is contained in the will; it is sufficient if they read the clause they sign.

The form of attestation given above seems to contain in as few words as possible all the facts necessary for a due and proper execution of a will. First, it teaches that the testator has signed; and this is not unnecessary, for cases have occurred where the witnesses signed first, and then the testator, which, of course, was not a due execution. Secondly, it teaches that the witnesses were present at the same time, and that they subscribed in the presence of the testator, and also in the presence of each other; and it also provides a convenient mode of authenticating alterations, instead of the testator and the witnesses placing their initials opposite to each.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 17, 1861.

IN our impression of the 27th July (ante, p. 289) we inserted a statement, taken from a morning paper, that on the 18th July, "at a parliament held, after many adjournments, Mr. Edwin James, Q. C., was disbarred by the Benchers of the Inner Temple; and that fact was ordered to be communicated to all the judges of law and equity, and the other three Inns of Court;" and likewise, from the same source, a letter, purporting to come from the solicitor of Mr. James, stating that notice had been given of his intention to appeal to the judges against that order.

The name of Mr. Edwin James has been very prominently before the Profession for some months past. In the beginning and spring of this year he was in the position he had long held at the Bar—a Queen's counsel of acknowledged ability and high practice; recorder of a populous and flourishing town; and more than once spoken of as likely to be invested with the office of Solicitor-General, and in time succeed to those higher offices to which it usually leads. He was also a busy and energetic member of Parliament, in which he represented a large, populous, and rich metropolitan borough. Nor was his fame confined to England; his able defence of Dr. Bernard, some years since, having procured him a continental reputation; and he had recently made himself conspicuous on the occasion of Garibaldi's celebrated expedition to the Two Sicilies, which he accompanied as an amateur, though not in a military capacity. For some considerable time past, indeed, it was well known that his pecuniary affairs were not in a satisfactory state; but even at the beginning of the spring, few persons, if any, were prepared for the catastrophe that was so rapidly approaching. First, in April, to the general astonishment, Mr. James resigned his seat as member for Marylebone, and also his office of recorder of Brighton (ante, p. 162). About a month later it was stated that he had filed a petition in the Court of Bankruptcy, under the 7 & 8 Vict., for private arrangement with his creditors, and that his debts and liabilities amounted to very nearly 100,000*l.* (ante, p. 213); and now we have the announcement referred to at the head of the present article.

Ever since these events in the career of Mr. James rumour has been extremely busy with his name, and reports attributing them to misconduct of a serious nature on his part have spread far and wide. Numerous were the causes assigned for these events, and the conduct of Mr. James has not only been freely canvassed in the Profession, but many notices respecting it have appeared in the public prints, some evidently proceeding from his friends, and others from sources hostile to him. During all this time, we, having ascertained that the conduct of Mr. James was to be inquired into by the Benchers of the Inn of Court to which he belonged, deemed the matter sub judice, and cautiously forbore alluding to it further than simply to notify to our readers the several events as they occurred. But now that judgment in his case has been pronounced by the proper tribunal, we feel that we ought to keep silence no longer, and we deem it our duty to state as our decided conviction that the time for secrecy on this subject has passed by. The disbarring any gentleman (except, of course, when done at his own request, to enable him to follow some other avocation than the Bar) is at all times a serious affair; but when so strong, and we believe unprecedented, an act of authority is exercised as the disbarring a Queen's counsel, the Profession and the Public have a right to know the reason. In the present case, in particular, they have a right to ask, "For what crime or misconduct is it that a gentleman in so eminent a position is visited with a destruction so total, and, as it were, 'shot from the heavens like a falling star?'" And this the more especially as all the reports on the subject, however irreconcilable in many respects, agree in this, that the proceedings against him have not been based merely on pecuniary embarrassment, which would indeed be a most weak and unsatisfactory basis for them. We hope we shall not be misunderstood as questioning in the least the decision of the Benchers in this matter; indeed, our ignorance of the grounds on which it proceeded would alone preclude that; added to which, the maxim "Presumitur pro justitia sententie" applies in this case as well as in that of other judicial tribunals; but mystery in such matters is repugnant alike to our laws, customs, and feelings; and the following arguments used by Bentham against secrecy in judicial proceedings apply here in their full force:—

"Upon the moral faculties of the judge publicity acts as a check, restraining him from active partiality and improbity in every shape; upon his intellectual faculties it acts as a spur, urging him to that habit of unremitting exertion, without which his attention can never be kept up to the pitch of his duty. Without any addition to the mass of delay, vexation, and expense, it keeps the judge himself, while trying, under trial. Under the auspices of publicity, the original cause in the court of law, and the appeal to the court of public opinion, are going on at the same time. So many bystanders as an unrighteous judge—or rather a judge who would otherwise have been unrighteous—beholds attending in his court, so many witnesses he sees of his unrighteousness, so many ready executioners, so many industrious proclaimers of his sentence. On the other hand, suppose the proceedings to be completely secret, and the court on the occasion to consist of no more than a single judge, that judge will be at once indolent and arbitrary; how corrupt soever his inclination may be, it will find no check—at any rate, no tolerably efficient check—to oppose it. . . . Publicity is further useful as a security for the reputation of the judge (if blameless) against the imputation of having misconceived, or, as if on pretence of misconception, falsified, the evidence. Withhold this safeguard, the reputation of the judge remains a perpetual prey to calumny, without the possibility of defence." (1 Bentham's Jud. Ev. 523-525).

We repeat, the time for secrecy in this matter has gone by; and the Benchers of the Inner Temple owe it alike to themselves, the Profession, the public, and even to Mr. James himself, to persevere in their reserve no longer. Nor does the circumstance of Mr. James having announced his intention to appeal against the sentence make any difference. An appeal stops nothing; as Mr. James, if innocent, will have found to his cost; add to which, there is no certainty that the appeal will be prosecuted.

RIGHTS OF BELLIGERENTS IN CIVIL WAR.

EXTRACTS from opinions delivered in the Supreme Court of the United States:—

In the Supreme Court of the United States, in 1796, Chase, J., said—"In June, 1776, the convention of Virginia formally declared that Virginia was a free, sovereign, and independent state; and on the 4th July, 1776, following, the United States, in congress assembled, declared that the thirteen united colonies were free and independent states, and that as such they had full power to levy war, conclude peace, &c. I consider this as a declaration, not that the United States jointly, in a collective capacity, were independent states, &c., but that each of them was a sovereign and independent state—that is, that each of them had a right to govern itself by its own authority and its own laws, without any control from any other power upon earth. Before these solemn acts of separation from the Crown of Great Britain, the war between Great Britain and the United Colonies jointly and separately was a civil war; but, instantly on that great and ever-memorable event, the war changed its nature, and became a public war between independent governments, and immediately thereupon all the rights of public war (and all the other rights of an independent nation) attached to the government of Virginia; and all the former political connexion between Great Britain and Virginia, and also between their respective subjects was totally dissolved; and not only the two nations, but all the subjects of each, were in a state of war, precisely as in the present war between Great Britain and France." (Ware v. Hylton, etc., 3 Dall. 224).

In 1815, Story, J., delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court, said—"The definition of prize goods is, that they are goods taken on the high seas, jure belli, out of the hands of the enemy. When so taken the captors have an undoubted right to proceed against them as belligerent property in a Court of Prize; for in no other way, and in no other court, can the questions presented on a capture jure belli be properly or effectually examined. The very circumstance that it is found in the possession of the enemy affords prima facie evidence that it is his property." (Case of the schooner Adeline, 9 Cranch, 284, 285).

In 1818, on an indictment against several persons for piracy committed on the high seas, the Supreme Court was called on to consider questions "which respect the rights of a part of a foreign empire which asserts and is contending for its independence." On that occasion Marshall, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court, said—"In such contests a nation may engage itself with the one party or the other, may observe absolute neutrality, may recognise the new state absolutely, or may make a limited recognition of it. The proceeding in court must depend so entirely on the course of the government that it is difficult to give a precise answer to questions which do not refer to a particular nation. It may be said generally, that if the government remains neutral, and recognises the existence of a civil war, its courts cannot consider as criminal those acts of hostility which war authorises, and which the new government may direct against its enemy. To decide otherwise would be to determine that the war prosecuted by one of the parties was unlawful, and would be to arrange the nation to which the court belongs against that party." (The United States v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. 634, 635).

This decision established the principle, that the government of the United States having recognised the existence of a civil war between Spain and her colonies, but remaining neutral, the courts of the Union were bound to consider as lawful those acts which war authorised, and which the new governments in South America might direct against their enemy. So it was declared by Marshall, C. J., in 1819, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of The Divina Pastora (4 Wheat. 63).

In the case of The Estrella, captured in 1819 by The Constitution, of Venezuela, the Court was satisfied with the proof which had been made of The Constitution having had a commission at the time of making the capture, and that such commission was granted by the government of Venezuela. (The Estrella, 4 Wheat. 308, 304). There was before the Court in the same year (1819) another case, in which the only question was, whether an original Spanish owner was entitled to the aid of the courts of the United States to restore to him property of which he had been dispossessed by capture under a commission derived from the revolted colonies; and this question was considered by the Court as having been fully decided by the principles assumed in the case of The United States v. Palmer, and by the decisions in the cases of The Divina Pastora and The Estrella. Johnson, J., in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court, said—"War notoriously exists, and is recognised by our government to exist, between Spain and her colonies. This is an appeal to the highest of all tribunals on a question of right. No neutral nation can act against either without taking part with the other in the war. All that the law of nations requires of us is strict and impartial neutrality, and no friendly nation ought to demand of the courts of this country to do an act which may involve it in a war with the victor. Our duty is, where the property of either is brought innocently within our jurisdiction, to leave things as we find them; much more, to restore them to that state from which they have been forcibly removed by the act of our own citizens. The treaty with Spain can have no bearing upon the case, as this Court cannot recognise such captors as pirates, and the capture was not made within our jurisdictional limits. In those two cases only does the treaty enjoin restitution."

Revised.

A Treatise on the Law of Inland Carriers. By EDMUND POWELL, Esq., of Lincoln College, Oxford, M.A., and of the Inner Temple and Western Circuit, Barrister at Law, Author of "A Treatise on the Principles of Evidence." Second Edition. [Butterworths, London; Hodges, Smith, & Co., Dublin. 1861.]

In order to understand the design of the author in this work, as well as to appreciate the difference between the former and the present edition, it will be necessary to look at their respective Prefaces. In the former, published in January, 1856, Mr. Powell says—"Few branches of the law involve questions of more daily practical interest and importance than the law of carriers, and yet it is a branch which hitherto has attracted little systematic treatment by any member of the Profession. The American treatise by Mr. Angell is the only modern work on the subject, and it is deservedly a work of high authority in the courts. But the last edition of it was published many years since, and the multitude of cases which have been decided subsequently in the English courts appeared to call for a new digest and treatise. Many also of the common-law principles, which are recognised in the American courts, have been either modified in England, or altogether varied by the Legislature. In this treatise, therefore, the author has attempted to supply a patent deficiency in law libraries, and to give the consolidated results of the latest acts of Parliament and decisions of the Courts." In the latter, published during the present vacation, he says—"This second edition has been revised carefully, and substantially rewritten. The two chapters on the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, are quite new, and they contain, I hope, a correct analysis and summary of the intricate cases which have arisen under that statute. I have omitted or shortened much of the first edition which I thought to be either obsolete or superfluous; and by this means I have been able to reconstruct and modernise this treatise without enlarging it materially. I have only to add, that I have endeavoured to make it a scientific and practical work, as well as a trustworthy and complete digest of cases."

The subject of this treatise is not, indeed, a large one, but it has been got up by Mr. Powell with considerable care, and contains ample notice of the most recent cases and authorities.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM.—MR. COMMISSIONER FANE.

THE following appears in the morning papers:—

"The court of Mr. Commissioner Fane was much crowded to-day (Tuesday, Aug. 13), in consequence of a statement by the learned commissioner that he would this morning read a letter which he had written to Lord Palmerston upon the subject of Bankruptcy Reform.

"Mr. Commissioner Fane said—'Since I mentioned the subject of this letter, I have had a conversation with a gentleman in whose judgment I place the greatest confidence, and, in deference to his opinion, I postpone the reading of the letter until the re-assembling of the legal world after the holidays. Those gentlemen, therefore, who have come here in anticipation of hearing the letter read will, I am sure, be disappointed, but disappointed only for a short time, because after the vacation I will certainly read the letter. I am sorry, very sorry, to have caused all this disappointment.'

On this proceeding The Times comments as follows:—

"A very considerable sensation was created in the Court of Bankruptcy on Monday morning. It is not a place where great interest is often excited, except among those immediately and pecuniarily concerned. Now and then we have great swindles rolled into the court, and unrolled to a curious public. But, in the ordinary course of business, it is a question of small tricks of trade, and illusory dividends, and ill-kept books; and the by-play of compromises and compositions is of much more importance than the actual judicial work. On Monday, however, the usual buzz of conversation was hushed by a sudden speech from the Bench. Mr. Commissioner Fane, having expressed himself strongly upon the dealings of an umbrella maker, suddenly turned upon the Bar practising before him, and claimed their attention. Mr. Commissioner Fane appealed to Mr. Bagley, who, we presume, was the senior barrister present—a very respectable practitioner, whose services are much, and we believe deservedly, in request in that court—and informed him that he had addressed a letter to Lord Palmerston. What Mr. Bagley's sensations were when he was thus made, by the judge before whom he practises, a court of appeal from the Government and the Legislature, we are not told; for the learned gentleman, with a discretion which might have been wisely imitated by the commissioner, held his tongue. Mr. Fane, however, proceeded to inform Mr. Bagley, that, in his letter to Lord Palmerston, he had expressed 'his feelings' as to the manner in which Mr. Fane and his colleagues had been treated by the Government and the Legislature in the framing of the Bankruptcy Act, which has just become a portion of the statute law. This expression of Mr. Fane's feelings he had printed, and he desired to make it as public as possible; and, as the audience was at that moment not very numerous, he invited a general attendance of the Bar and the Press on the morrow, when he proposed to read the letter, and to distribute printed copies of it 'to every gentleman who might wish to have one.'

"There was a very large attendance in the Bankruptcy Court yesterday. Such a consequence might have been very certainly predicted. There was a large assemblage to see 'the female Blondin' risk her life upon a rope over the Thames; a still greater crowd would go forth to see a person of grave and sedate character, and high judicial or ecclesiastical position, grin through a horse-collar or climb a greased pole. Basinghall-street was crowded with persons desirous of seeing Mr. Fane 'express his feelings.' Happily, however, for the decencies of the judicial bench, the exhibition did not come off. Instead of delighting the groundlings by a repetition of the letter in which the bankruptcy judge had demolished the Premier, Mr. Fane, like a manager whose arrangements have been discomposed by the Lord Chamberlain, made his audience an apology. 'Since I mentioned the subject of this letter,' said Mr. Commissioner Fane from the bench, 'I have had a conversation with a gentleman in whose judgment I place the greatest confidence, and in deference to his opinion I postpone the reading of the letter until the re-assembling of the legal world after the holidays. Those gentlemen, therefore, who have come here in anticipation of hearing the letter read will, I am sure, be disappointed, but disappointed only for a short time, because after the vacation I will certainly read the letter. I am sorry, very sorry, to have caused all this disappointment.' The treat, it seems, is deferred, but not abandoned. The select audience which periodically assembles in Basinghall-street may still look forward to the moment when the judge will cast himself upon the sympathies of the fraudulent bankrupts who have been doubting about their certificates, and the equivocal creditors who are as doubtful about being allowed to prove their debts, and the shrewd attorneys who are all on the side of his ill-used Honor, and the sardonic barristers who are bound to a Basinghall-street politeness. When the 'legal world' come back to town Mr. Fane is to appeal to this influential assembly against the wicked Premier and the unjust Legislature.

"Beyond the limits of strict science no universal proposition is true. For once, a man has been saved by his friends. If Mr. Fane had read his wrongs before his bankruptcy, he would have been removed from the Bench with the general applause of all reasonable men. We believe there is something to be said about the services of the commissioners of bankruptcy, and about the promises originally made to them many years ago. We ourselves asked for some consideration of their case when the Bankruptcy Bill was before the House of Commons two sessions ago. It is a matter which might fairly be made the subject of discussion in Parliament, and which would very properly be entertained by the Lord Chancellor advising the Government. But we certainly never contemplated a scene like this—a judge appealing to his own suitors against the injustice of his superiors in office, and against the acts of the Legislature! Surely an act of such gross indecorum was never before heard of in this land! It is so startling an act of indecency upon the Bench, that we hardly know how to treat it. The natural impulse is to laugh, but it is not a thing to laugh at. Even the Bankruptcy Court has its dignity, and ought to have its respect, and we believe the commissioners generally, in the discharge of the business before them, are fully entitled to all the consideration due to a learned and impartial court. We hope that the judicious friend who balked the audience yesterday of their promised merriment will continue to exercise his influence, not only for Mr. Fane's sake, but also for that of his coadjutors, who we are sure can be no partners in this singular adventure. If this rational influence should retain its force, we are sure we shall hear no more of Mr. Fane's appeal to the Jews and Gentiles of Basinghall-street."

[Without indorsing every part of the above article, we will observe that Mr. Commissioner Fane has now more than two months before him, in which it is to be hoped he will reconsider his determination. What he has already done is had enough; let us hope that we shall be spared the crowning indecorum.—Ed.]

PROOF OF PREVIOUS CONVICTIONS OF PRISONERS.—DUTY OF GAOL OFFICIALS.

THE following (says The Times) took place on the 26th July at the assizes for Derby:—

"Mr. Justice Willes took his seat in the Crown Court at ten this morning, and, having charged the grand jury, proceeded to try prisoners.

"In the case of Robert Johnson, who, on an indictment for burglary, conducted by Mr. Huish, was convicted, the learned judge, in sentencing the prisoner, observed upon the conduct of the governor of Worcester Gaol, who, having been requested to attend at Derby to prove two previous convictions of the prisoner, had sent the following answer to the application:—

"Sir,—In reply to your letter, I am directed by the governor to inform you that the officers of this prison will not volunteer to attend any assize or sessions, or leave home, unless they are regularly served with a subpoena. They have no interest in identifying prisoners, and in the majority of cases the costs allowed them do not cover their expenses.

"I am, sir, your obedient servant,
"CHARLES JONES, Clerk.

"W. Bennett, Esq.,
"Clerk to the Magistrates, Chapel-en-le-Frith, Derbyshire."

"The learned judge said, 'It is usual for the officers of a gaol to furnish to the judge trying a prisoner information of all the offences he has committed, as a guide to the judge in apportioning the punishment, and all gaolers and other officers of the Queen are bound, in the interests of justice, to afford all the assistance in their power for this purpose. If the trial be at a distance they are bound to come, and not to wait for any compulsory process. A gaoler is in the Queen's service, and he ought at once to put all things aside to assist those who have to administer the law, in the proper treatment of offences against the Queen. In this case a most impertinent letter has been written from the gaoler at Worcester, declining to come to prove a former conviction without a subpoena, and adding that the expenses allowed for this are not adequate to repay the outlay. I think it right to make this observation on the very improper conduct of this official at Worcester.'"

Warwick, July 31.—Mr. Justice Willes took his seat on the Crown side at eleven o'clock, and charged the grand jury, and in the course of his address made the following reference to the report in The Times of remarks made by his Lordship on the conduct of the gaoler of Worcester:—

"I made some remarks at Derby upon the case of an officer of Worcester Gaol, whose attendance as a witness to the identity of a prisoner twice previously convicted, and confined in that gaol, was refused, unless he was regularly served with a subpoena. The refusal was upon the ground principally that the expenses allowed in criminal cases are insufficient. That objection, to my mind, does not lie in the mouth of an officer of the Crown to make. It is simply obstructive. The service of a subpoena would have added to the trouble and expense of the prosecution, without doing any good to the witness. Upon serving a subpoena in criminal cases no tender of expenses is legally necessary. The witness, if he be not a pauper, is bound to attend, trusting to what the Court may allow him. It is, however, but reasonable that the lawful expenses should be paid in the first instance, and I should find no fault with an officer refusing to stir without a subpoena unless such expenses were advanced. What I do object to is, that the useless trouble and expense of serving a subpoena should be insisted upon by an officer of the law, because he thinks the Home Office scale of costs illiberal. It is an unbecoming way of raising that question to throw difficulties in the way of justice. At the same time, it is certain that very many other persons besides the gaoler, whose letter called forth my remarks, think the allowance insufficient, and I should exceedingly regret that remarks intended to check a mischievous practice should do any injury to that officer. I fear that my remarks have conveyed an impression more serious to him than I intended, and I take the first opportunity of saying so."

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF SOCIAL SCIENCE — JURISPRUDENCE.

At the meeting of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, which is now being held at Dublin, the following papers will be read in the department of Jurisprudence:—

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 24, 1861.

THE Bankruptcy Act, 1861, is to take effect from and after the passing thereof, as to the appointment of the officers thereby authorised to be appointed, and as to all other matters and things from and after the 11th October, 1861. In the meantime the law relating to bankruptcy and insolvency, and to arrangements between debtors and their creditors, remains unchanged. From that date the act will materially alter the law with respect to arrangements between debtors and creditors; and persons so related to each other, who are contemplating arrangements out of court, will do well to consider how they would be affected by the act, and whether it is desirable to carry them out under the existing law, or to wait until the new law has come into operation. With a view to assist them in their deliberation, we shall endeavour to state the effect of the new enactments, so far as it is possible, without the aid of the Court, to state the effect of any part of this ill-drawn act.

In lieu of what are known as the six-sevenths clauses of the act of 1849, the new act provides that every deed or instrument between a debtor and his creditors, or any of them, or a trustee on their behalf, relating to the debts or liabilities of the debtor, and his release therefrom, or the distribution, inspection, management, and winding up of his estate, or any of such matters, shall bind all his creditors, if the following conditions are observed:—

1. Three-fourths in value, and a majority in number, of the creditors for 10*l.* or upwards shall assent in writing.

2. If a trustee is appointed, he shall execute the deed.

3. The execution by the debtor shall be attested by an attorney.

4 and 6. The deed (duly stamped) shall be registered at the office of the chief registrar in bankruptcy within twenty-eight days after execution by the debtor.

5. For the purposes of registration, the deed shall be produced, with an affidavit by the debtor or some person able to depose thereto, or a certificate by the trustees, of the amount in value of the property and credits of the debtor comprised in the deed, and that the assents mentioned in condition 1 have been obtained.

7. Immediately on execution of the deed by the debtor, possession of all the property comprised therein, of which the debtor can give or order possession, shall be given to the trustees.

In spite of the warning afforded by the cases of Telley v. Taylor (1 El. & Bl. 521) and Drew v. Collins (6 Exch. 670), the ambiguous language of the arrangement clauses in the act of 1849 has been adopted, with a slight variation, which aggravates the ambiguity; but it may be assumed that the old authorities will be followed, and that no arrangement will be held to bind non-assenting creditors unless it provides for the distribution of all the debtor's property for the rateable benefit of all his creditors.

Although the second condition suggests that there may or may not be a trustee, the seventh condition implies that there must be a trustee. Assuming that there must be a trustee, we have to inquire of what he is to be trustee. In deeds of inspectorship the debtor usually enters into certain covenants with the inspectors, so framed that the inspectors alone can sue upon them; and of the rights of action so given to the inspectors they may be considered to be trustees for the creditors. But this can hardly be the meaning of the act, because the fifth and seventh conditions plainly contemplate that the deed shall comprise property, and assign it to trustees.

For registration the deed is to be delivered to the registrar, with an affidavit by the debtor or some person able to depose thereto, or a certificate by the trustee or trustees, of the assent of the requisite proportion of creditors. A certificate is a mere statement, involving no legal responsibility; and this provision, which, if it has any object, is intended to exclude from registration all deeds except those which are actually binding on all the creditors, will be wholly ineffectual. The certificate of the value of the property will be equally worthless.

The deed must be registered within twenty-eight days after execution by the debtor. It may require, especially in cases where there are creditors abroad, a much longer time than twenty-eight days to procure the concurrence of the requisite number of creditors; and therefore, as well as for the purpose of avoiding an act of bankruptcy, the execution of the deed by the debtor must follow the execution by the creditors.

Lastly, possession of all the property must be given to the trustees immediately on the execution by the debtor. We can only wait with patience for the completion of the long series of decisions which will be necessary to put an interpretation on the words "immediately" and "possession." They will probably be equal in number to the cases in which trustees will be found to take office under such deeds. It is not to be expected that creditors will often be induced to accept the responsibility of an assignment of the debtor's property, coupled with the obligation of actually taking possession of it. The effect of the enactments is to abolish the practice which of late has found great favour with creditors, of allowing debtors to wind up under the inspection of their principal creditors.

On the registration of the deed the registrar is required to advertise the names of the parties (except the creditors), with a statement of the effect of the deed, in the Gazette. (Sect. 193).

After registration, all persons, parties to or bound by the deed, are, "in all matters relating to the estate and effects of the debtor," made subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy, and the trustees are clothed with all the rights of assignees in bankruptcy.

If the debtor cannot ascertain by whom bills, notes, or negotiable securities are held, it shall be sufficient if he obtains the consent of three-fourths of his other creditors, provided he insert an advertisement in a newspaper published in the place where he carried on business, requiring his creditors to come in within fourteen days, and the circumstances are certified by the trustees, and the same is allowed by the court, and the deed is in the form set forth in a schedule to the act.

The effect of these provisions will probably be to destroy the practice of effecting arrangements by deed for any other purpose than that of securing the choice of assignees.

There are mixed up with the clauses noticed above some provisions of a very extraordinary character, to which we must draw the attention of our readers, without professing to understand or attempting to explain them.

By sect. 194 it is enacted, that "every deed, instrument, or agreement whatever, by which a debtor, not being a bankrupt, conveys, or covenants or agrees to convey, his estate and effects, or the principal part thereof, for the benefit of his creditors, or makes any arrangement or agreement with his creditors, or any person on their behalf, for the distribution, inspection, conduct, management, or winding up of his affairs or estate, or the release or discharge of such debtor from his debts or liabilities," shall, within twenty-eight days after execution by the debtor, be registered in bankruptcy, and in default thereof shall not be received in evidence. Then come clauses imposing a stamp duty of 5s. in the 100l. on all deeds brought to be registered; subjecting the debtor and creditors to the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy; giving protection to the debtor from process; and suspending proceedings under petition for adjudication during the time allowed for adjudication; which seem to be equally applicable to deeds within the 194th section and to those which are assented to by three-fourths of the creditors. Whether the 194th section extends to a deed which effects an arrangement between a debtor and a few of his creditors, as well as to a deed assented to by all the creditors, and whether in any case a debtor, merely by registering a deed of arrangement to which none of his creditors assent, can prevent a creditor from suing him without the leave of the Court of Bankruptcy, are questions which we must leave for the consideration of our readers. One thing is plain, that this act has thrown the law of debtor and creditor into the greatest confusion, without effecting or attempting any amendment which would be worth the inconvenience necessarily attendant upon the change, even if it were effected with the greatest care and skill.

THE EXTRADITION CASE.—CANADIAN LEGISLATION.

WHEN the extradition case was under discussion in the early part of the present year, we laid before our readers the extract from the Canadian statute on which the question turned (ante p. 33). Since the decision in that case the Canadian law has been altered as follows:—

STATUTES OF LAST SESSION OF PARLIAMENT.

CHAPTER VI.

An Act to amend Chapter 89 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, respecting the Extradition of Fugitive Felons from the United States of America.

[Assented to 18th May, 1861.]

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. The 1st, 2nd, and 3rd sections of the 89th chapter of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, intituled "An Act respecting the Treaty between Her Majesty and the United States of America for the Apprehension and Surrender of certain Offenders," are hereby repealed.

2. The following section or paragraph shall be substituted for the 1st section, hereby repealed, and shall, in lieu thereof, be read as the 1st section of the said act:—

"Upon complaint made under oath, or affirmation (in cases where affirmations can be legally taken instead of oaths), charging any person, found within the limits of this province, with having committed, within the jurisdiction of the United States of America, any of the crimes enumerated or provided for by the said treaty, it shall be lawful for any judge of any of her Majesty's superior courts in this province, or any judge of a county court in Upper Canada, or any recorder of a city in this province, or any police magistrate or stipendiary magistrate in this province, or any inspector or superintendent of police empowered to act as a justice of the peace in Lower Canada, to issue his warrant for the apprehension of the person so charged, that he may be brought before such judge or other officer; and upon the said person being brought before him, under the said warrant, it shall be lawful for such judge or other officer to examine upon oath any person or persons touching the truth of such charge; and upon such evidence as according to the laws of this province would justify the apprehension and commitment for trial of the person so accused, if the crime of which he shall be so accused had been committed herein, it shall be lawful for such judge or other officer to issue his warrant for the commitment of the person so charged to the proper gaol, there to remain until surrendered according to the stipulation of the said treaty, or until discharged according to law; and the said judge or other officer shall thereupon forthwith transmit or deliver to the governor a copy of all the testimony taken before him, that a warrant may issue upon the requisition of the United States for the surrender of such person, pursuant to the said treaty."

3. The following section or paragraph shall be substituted for the 2nd section, hereby repealed, and shall, in lieu thereof, be read as the 2nd section of the said act:—

"In every case of complaint as aforesaid, and of a hearing upon the return of the warrant of arrest, copies of the depositions upon which the original warrant may have been granted in the United States, certified under the hand of the person or persons issuing such warrant, and attested, upon the oath of the party producing them, to be true copies of the original depositions, may be received in evidence of the criminality of the person so apprehended."

4. The following section or paragraph shall be substituted for the 3rd section, hereby repealed, and shall, in lieu thereof, be read as the 3rd section of the said act:—

"It shall be lawful for the governor, upon a requisition, made as aforesaid, by the United States, by warrant under his hand and seal, to order the person so committed to be delivered to the person or persons authorized to receive such person in the name and on behalf of the said United States, to be tried for the crime of which such person stands accused, and such person shall be delivered up accordingly; and the person or persons, authorized as aforesaid, may hold such person in custody, and take him to the territories of the said United States, pursuant to the said treaty; and if the person so accused escapes out of any custody to which he stands committed, or to which he has been delivered as aforesaid, such person may be retaken, in the same manner as any person accused of any crime against the laws of this province may be retaken upon an escape."

UNITED STATES LAW REPORTS.

THE following important case, arising out of the civil war in the United States of America, is taken, necessarily in an abbreviated form, from the Upper Canada Law Journal for July, 1861:—

In re JOHN MERRYMAN.—June 1.

United States—Habeas corpus—Right thereto—Power of executive to suspend.

Held, first, that the President of the United States of America cannot suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, nor authorise a military officer to do it. Secondly, that a military officer has no right to arrest and detain a person, not subject to the rules and articles of war, for an offence against the laws of the United States, except in aid of the judicial authority, and subject to its control.

On the 26th May, 1861, the following sworn petition was presented to the Chief Justice of the United States on behalf of John Merryman, he being at the time in confinement in Fort M'Henry:—

"To the Hon. Roger B. Taney, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"The petition of John Merryman, of Baltimore county, and state of Maryland, respectfully shews, that, being at home in his own domicile, he was, about the hour of two o'clock A. M. on the 25th May, 1861, aroused from his bed by an armed force, pretending to act under military orders from some person to your petitioner unknown. That he was by the said armed force deprived of his liberty, by being taken into custody, and removed from his said home to Fort M'Henry, near to the city of Baltimore, and in the district aforesaid, and where your petitioner now is in close custody.

"That he has been so imprisoned without any process or colour of law whatsoever, and that none such is pretended by those who are thus detaining him; and that no warrant from any court, magistrate, or other person having legal authority to issue the same, exists to justify such arrest; but, to the contrary, the same, as above stated, hath been done without colour of law, and in violation of the constitution and laws of the United States, of which he is a citizen. That since his arrest he has been informed that some order, purporting to come from one General Keim, of Pennsylvania, to this petitioner unknown, directing the arrest of the captain of some company in Baltimore county, of which company the petitioner never was and is not captain, was the pretended ground of his arrest, and is the sole ground, as he believes, on which he is now detained.

"That the person now so detaining him at the said fort is Brigadier-General George Cadwalader, the military commander of the said post, professing to act in the premises under or by colour of the authority of the United States. Your petitioner, therefore, prays that the writ of habeas corpus may issue, to be directed to the said George Cadwalader, commanding him to produce your petitioner before you, judge as aforesaid, with the cause, if any, for his arrest and detention, to the end that your petitioner be discharged and restored to liberty; and as in duty, &c.,

"JOHN MERRYMAN.

"Fort M'Henry, May 25, 1861."

"United States of America, District of Maryland, to wit.

"Before the subscriber, a commissioner appointed by the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for the fourth circuit and district of Maryland, to take affidavits, &c., personally appeared, the 25th day of May, A.D. 1861, George H. Williams, of the city of Baltimore, and district aforesaid, and made oath on the Holy Evangely of Almighty God that the matters and facts stated in the foregoing petition are true, to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief, and that the said petition was signed in his presence by the petitioner, and would have been sworn to by him, the said petitioner, but that he was at the time, and still is, in close custody, and all access to him denied, except to his counsel and his brother-in-law, this deponent being one of the said counsel.

"Sworn to before me this 25th day of May, A.D. 1861.

"JOHN HANAN, U. S. Commissioner."

"United States of America, District of Maryland, to wit.

"Before the subscriber, a commissioner appointed by the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for the fourth circuit and district of Maryland, to take affidavits, &c., personally appeared, this 26th day of May, 1861, George H. Williams, of the city of Baltimore, and district aforesaid, and made oath on the Holy Evangely of Almighty God that on the 26th day of May he went to Fort M'Henry, in the preceding affidavit mentioned, and obtained an interview with General George Cadwalader, then and there in command; and the deponent, one of the counsel of the said John Merryman in the foregoing petition named, and at his request, and declaring himself to be such counsel, requested and demanded that he might be permitted to see the written papers, and to be permitted to make copies thereof, under and by which he, the said General, detained the said Merryman in custody; and that to the said demand the said General Cadwalader replied that he would neither permit the deponent, though officially requesting and demanding as such counsel, to read the said papers, nor to have or make copies thereof.

"Sworn to this 26th day of May, A.D. 1861, before me,

"JOHN HANAN,

"United States Commissioner for Maryland."

Upon this petition the Chief Justice passed the following order:—

"In the matter of the petition of John Merryman for a writ of habeas corpus.

"Ordered, this 26th day of May, A. D. 1861, that the writ of habeas corpus issue in this case as prayed, and that the same be directed to General George Cadwalader, and be issued in the usual form by Thomas Spicer, clerk of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for the district of Maryland; and that the said writ of habeas corpus be returnable at eleven o'clock on Monday, the 27th May, 1861, at the Circuit Court room, in the Masonic Hall, in the city of Baltimore, before me, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"R. B. TANEY."

In obedience to this order Mr. Spicer issued the following writ:—

"District of Maryland to wit, United States of America. To General George Cadwalader, greeting.

"You are hereby commanded to be and appear before the Hon. Roger B. Taney, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, at the United States court-room, in the Masonic Hall, in the city of Baltimore, on Monday, the 27th day of May, 1861, at eleven o'clock in the morning, and that you have with you the body of John Merryman, of Baltimore county, and now in your custody; and that you certify and make known the day and cause of the caption and detention of the said John Merryman, and that you then and there do submit it to, and receive whatsoever the said Chief Justice shall determine upon concerning you on this behalf, according to law; and have you then and there this writ.

"Witness, the Hon. R. B. Taney, Chief Justice of our Supreme Court, &c.

"Issued 26th May, 1861."

The marshal made his return that he had served the writ on General Cadwalader on the same day on which it issued, and filed that return on the 27th May, 1861, on which day, at eleven o'clock precisely, the Chief Justice took his seat on the bench. In a few minutes Colonel Lee, a military officer, appeared with General Cadwalader's return to the writ, which is as follows:—

"Head-quarters, Department of Annapolis.

"To the Hon. Roger P. Taney, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, Baltimore, Maryland.

"Sir,—The undersigned, to whom the annexed writ of this date, signed by Thomas Spicer, clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, is directed, most respectfully states that the arrest of Mr. John Merryman, in the said writ named, was not made with his knowledge or by his order or direction, but was made by Colonel Samuel Yohe, acting under the orders of Major-General William H. Keim, both of the said officers being in the military service of the United States, but not within the limits of his command.

"The prisoner was brought to this post on the 20th instant by Adjutant James Whittimore and Lieutenant William H. Abel, by order of Colonel Yohe, and is charged with various acts of treason, and with being publicly associated with and holding a commission as lieutenant in a company having in their possession arms belonging to the United States, and avowing his purpose of armed hostility against the government. He is also informed that it can be clearly established that the prisoner has made often and unreserved declarations of his association with this organised force as being in avowed hostility to the government, and in readiness to co-operate with those engaged in the present rebellion against the government of the United States. He has further to inform you that he is duly authorised by the President of the United States in such cases to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, for the public safety.

"This is a high and delicate trust, and it has been enjoined upon him that it should be executed with judgment and discretion; but he is nevertheless also instructed that in times of civil strife, errors, if any, should be on the side of the safety of the country. He most respectfully submits for your consideration that those who should co-operate in the present trying and painful position in which our country is placed should not, by any unnecessary want of confidence in each other, increase our embarrassments.

"He therefore respectfully requests that you will postpone further action upon this case until he can receive instructions from the President of the United States, when you shall hear further from him.

"I have the honour to be, with high respect, your obedient servant."

"GEORGE CADWALADER,

"Brevet Major-General U. S. A. Commanding."

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDSEWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. In 1 vol. royal 8vo., 1853, price 17. 16s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (dootin' malidus), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 31, 1861.

THE learned gentlemen who have prepared the last edition of Mr. Jarman's Treatise on Wills with so much industry and ability might confer another great benefit on the Profession if they would devote their attention to the arrangement and exposition of the decisions relating to the interpretation of written documents generally. It is remarkable, that though the reported cases on questions of interpretation contain as much accurate science as can be found in an equal number of precedents in any other division of English law, no attempt has been made to collect and exhibit in a systematic form the principles involved in them. Some detached portions of the rules of construction have indeed been treated with great success, as in the work we have named, but the exposition of the entire subject must still be noted as deficient. The consequence has been, that though the opinions of practising lawyers and decisions of courts in England on the particular cases that have come before them, involving questions of interpretation, have been, in substance at least, as scientific and consistent as their opinions and decisions on other cases (that is to say, far more scientific and consistent than the opinions and decisions of lawyers and judges in any other country), there has not been the same uniformity and consent among juriconsults when speaking of the rules of interpretation in the abstract, without reference to particular cases. The science of interpretation exists among the precedents of the English in a very advanced and refined state—just as any physical science may be said to have always existed among the appropriate phenomena of nature; but it has not yet been constructed as a distinct branch of human knowledge, and its general principles are still unrecognized. For example, able and learned lawyers are occasionally heard to insist that the aim and duty of the Court in interpreting a written document are limited to the discovery of the intention of the maker or makers of it, and cannot and ought not to be extended to the interpolation of terms or conditions which were not contemplated and intended to be expressed in it. Yet every lawyer who considers, for example, what is daily done in carrying wills into effect, will acknowledge that half the business of interpretation of written instruments consists in adding to them terms which were entirely overlooked by those who prepared them.

These reflections have been forced upon us by the perusal of a very able paper "On the Principles of Legal Interpretation with reference especially to Wills," by Mr. F. Vaughan Hawkins, which was read some time ago before the Juridical Society, and has been printed in the last number of the published papers of that body (vol. 2, p. 298), in which though the writer has properly undertaken to treat the subject as a whole, he has fallen into some errors in consequence, as it seems to us, of endeavouring to deduce his conclusions from first principles, instead of rising from particulars to general rules. If, in place of assuming, that while, in the interpretation of written language generally, the object "is a single one—to ascertain the meaning or intention of the writer—to discover what were the ideas existing in his mind which he desired and endeavoured to convey to us," we have in the interpretation of a legal document, "not, indeed, a different, but an additional, object of inquiry, and desire not solely to obtain information as to the intention or meaning of the writer or writers, but also to see that the intention or meaning has been expressed in such a way as to give it legal effect and validity," he had first studied the reported decisions, he would have found that much more is involved in the interpretation of legal documents than the inquiry as to the intended meaning, and the sufficiency in point of law of the written expression of it; and he might at the same time have recognised at once the limited scope and the correctness of a proposition in Sir J. Wigram's treatise on Extrinsic Evidence, which he has taken great pains to impugn. "The question in expounding a will," says Sir J. Wigram, "is not what the testator meant, but simply what is the meaning of his words." Mr. Hawkins asserts that this maxim contains a fallacy of no small importance, and proceeds to explain that language is in its nature an imperfect medium of expression, and that as, in the first intercourse by means of signs between persons who have not already a common language, there must be alternately a guessing of the intention from the sign, and an interpretation of each new sign from the presumed intention; so, even when the most refined language is used in the most accurate manner, the necessary incompleteness of its expression must be supplied by reference to the intention. This explanation is just, but it was hardly needed, after the comment which Sir J. Wigram has himself supplied on the maxim in question. His third proposition, for instance, is to the effect, that when the words of a will, taken in their ordinary sense, are insensible with reference to extrinsic circumstances, the Court may look into the extrinsic circumstances to see whether they are capable of any more unusual meaning with reference to those circumstances. The distinction, in short, intended, and to our apprehension sufficiently expressed, by Sir J. Wigram's maxim, is between an intention of which the testator has given a written sign capable of being comprehended under the circumstances of the case, and an intention which is surmised, but not from the written signs used by the testator. This distinction reconciles the rule admitting evidence of intention in cases of latent ambiguity, with the rule which denies effect to any intention not expressed in the written instrument; for the latter rule is merely a requisition that for everything that is to be recognised as the testator's will he shall have provided a written sign. If the sign is on the face of it ambiguous, it is in effect a sign of an alternative which is left undecided, and so there is no expression of choice or will; but if the sign is in expression definitive, and is only found to be ambiguous when it has to be applied to the facts, then it is reasonable to assume that the testator did not perceive the ambiguity, but had one object only in his contemplation, and in aid of the search for that object his declarations of intention are properly received.

When, therefore, Mr. Hawkins says that the process of interpretation "is the correcting or supplementing of the language of the writing, which by itself yields no clear meaning by the aid of other marks or signs of intent—in short, a bringing of the expression into harmony with the probable intention," or interpretation by inference—he confounds the interpretation of the language of the instrument with another very different and hitherto but obscurely recognised process, which may be called the interpretation of the instrument itself. The first process in construing an instrument is to find what has been actually said—and in the search after the meaning of the words all the processes described in Sir J. Wigram's treatise may be applied—and even the ultimate reference to the intention, in cases of latent ambiguity, is but part of this process of literal interpretation; since it is not to the probable intention that the Courts refer, but to the intention actually declared orally, for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of certain written signs.

It is important to place this part of the process on its true basis; for from the contrary assumption, that the meaning of the words is to be inferred from the presumed intention, Mr. Hawkins ingeniously, but most erroneously, deduces the non-existence, as a general rule, of any authority in the Courts to make an intention where the author of the instrument had none—an authority which unquestionably exists, and has been the origin of by far the greater part of the decisions classed as decisions on interpretation. Mr. Hawkins says, "I cannot see on what theory of interpretation the interpreter, as such, can have anything to do with that which he is not led to infer from the materials before him to have been the intention of the writer. No doubt the same judicial or other authority which interprets the writing may also exercise an ulterior and independent power of disposition or enactment over the same subject-matter; as in the case, for example, of what is called cy-près, or of the application of laws by a judge authorised to apply the spirit of the law to cases confessedly not within the contemplation of the framer of it; but, so far as the process alone of interpretation is concerned, there must, it seems to me, be a basis of inferred intention, to afford ground for any interference with, or modification of, the meaning of the words. It is to be observed that there may be cases where intention can and must be inferred, although, in fact, there may have been none. The interpreter cannot certainly know whether the intent existed; it is the indicia of intent, the marks or signs which afford reasonable presumption of its existence, which he can alone regard; and these he is bound to regard, although, in spite of such indications, there may have been no actual intention. The question, in short, is not what the writer meant, but what he has authorised the interpreter to say it is probable was his meaning." Well, this is coming almost to agreement with Wigram's fundamental maxim. But as applied to the process of interpretation, in the most extended sense of the expression, a sense not contemplated in Wigram's treatise, it is absolutely false. The business of the interpreter is first to ascertain what the writer has actually expressed, and then to apply such further terms which he has not expressed, and probably did not intend or contemplate, as are necessary to be supplied in order to carry the expressed intention into effect. For instance, a testator directs his executors to pay 100*l.* to each of the children of his brother Henry who shall attain the age of twenty-one years, and to divide 1000*l.* among such of the children of his brother James as shall attain the age of twenty-one years. There are children of each brother living at the testator's death, and after his death children are born to each. Pro-ably the testator never considered whether there might be after-born children or not, and probably the conception of his gifts never took such a form in his mind as to involve definitely either the exclusion or the inclusion of such children. But the will cannot be acted upon at all without a decision as to the after-born children. They must be either admitted or excluded; and in the absolute absence of intention, expressed or surmised, the Court comes to a decision which is the foundation of two rules of interpretation—it excludes the after-born children of Henry (Ringrose v. Bramham, 2 Cox, 384), and admits such of the after-born children of James as come into existence before the eldest attains his majority (Broughton v. James, 1 H. L. C. 406). This division of the subject—the extent and limits of the Court's authority to supply omitted provisions—though largely illustrated in point of fact by the reports and the text-writers, has yet scarcely been recognized as a distinct subject for scientific inquiry.

UNITED STATES LAW REPORTS.

The Chief Justice then inquired of the officer whether he had brought with him the body of John Merryman; and on being answered that he had no instructions but to deliver the return, the Chief Justice then said—

"General Cadwalader was commanded to produce the body of Mr. Merryman before me this morning, that the case might be heard, and the petitioner be either remanded to custody, or set at liberty, if held on insufficient grounds; but he has acted in disobedience to the writ, and I therefore direct that an attachment be at once issued against him, returnable before me here at twelve o'clock to-morrow."

The order was then passed as follows:—

"Ordered, that an attachment forthwith issue against General George Cadwalader for a contempt in refusing to produce the body of John Merryman, according to the command of the writ of habeas corpus, returnable and returned before me to-day; and that the said attachment be returned before me at twelve o'clock to-morrow, at the room of the Circuit Court.

"R. B. TANNEY.

"Monday, May 27, 1861."

The clerk then issued the writ of attachment as directed.

At twelve o'clock on the 28th May, 1861, the Chief Justice again took his seat on the bench, and called for the marshal's return to the writ of attachment. It was as follows:—

"I hereby certify to the Hon. Roger B. Taney, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, that, by virtue of the within writ of attachment to me directed on the 27th day of May, 1861, I proceeded, on this 28th day of May, 1861, to Fort M'Henry for the purpose of serving the said writ. I sent in my name at the outer gate; the messenger returned with the reply, "that there was no answer to my card," and therefore could not serve the writ as I was commanded. I was not permitted to enter the gate. So answers

"WASHINGTON BONIFANT,

"United States Marshal for the District of Maryland."

After it was read, the Chief Justice said that the marshal had the power to summon the posse comitatus to aid him in seizing and bringing before the court the party named in the attachment, who would, when so brought in, be liable to punishment by fine and imprisonment. But where, as in this case, the power refusing obedience was so notoriously superior to any the marshal could command, he held that officer excused from doing anything more than he had done. The Chief Justice then proceeded as follows:—

"I ordered this attachment yesterday, because, upon the face of the return, the detention of the prisoner was unlawful, upon the grounds—

"First, that the President, under the constitution of the United States, cannot suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, nor authorise a military officer to do it.

"Secondly, a military officer has no right to arrest and detain a person, not subject to the rules and articles of war, for an offence against the laws of the United States, except in aid of the judicial authority, and subject to its control; and if the party is arrested by the military, it is the duty of the officer to deliver him over immediately to the civil authority, to be dealt with according to law.

"It is, therefore, very clear that John Merryman, the petitioner, is entitled to be set at liberty, and discharged immediately from imprisonment.

"I forbore yesterday to state orally the provisions of the constitution of the United States which make those principles the fundamental law of the Union, because an oral statement might be misunderstood in some portions of it, and I shall therefore put my opinion in writing, and file it in the office of the clerk of the Circuit Court in the course of this week."

He concluded by saying that he should cause his opinion, when filed, and all the proceedings, to be laid before the President, in order that he might perform his constitutional duty to enforce the laws, by securing obedience to the process of the United States.

The following is a copy of the opinion subsequently filed by the Chief Justice:—

TANEY, C. J.—The application in this case for a writ of habeas corpus is made to me under the 14th section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, which renders effectual for the citizen the constitutional privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. That act gives to the courts of the United States, as well as to each justice of the Supreme Court, and to every district judge, power to grant writs of habeas corpus for the purpose of an inquiry into the cause of commitment. The petition was presented to me at Washington, under the impression that I would order the prisoner to be brought before me there; but as he was confined in Fort M'Henry, at the city of Baltimore, which is in my circuit, I resolved to hear it in the latter city, as obedience to the writ, under such circumstances, would not withdraw General Cadwalader, who had him in charge, from the limits of his military command.

The petition presents the following case:—The petitioner resides in Maryland, in Baltimore county. While peaceably in his own house, with his family, it was, at two o'clock on the morning of the 25th May, 1861, entered by an armed force, professing to act under military orders. He was then compelled to rise from his bed, taken into custody, and conveyed to Fort M'Henry, where he is imprisoned by the commanding officer, without warrant from any lawful authority.

The commander of the fort, General George Cadwalader, by whom he is detained in confinement, in his return to the writ, does not deny any of the facts alleged in the petition. He states that the prisoner was arrested by order of General Keim, of Pennsylv-vania, and conducted as aforesaid to Fort M'Henry by his order, and placed in his (General Cadwalader's) custody, to be there detained by him as a prisoner.

A copy of the warrant or order under which the prisoner was arrested was demanded by his counsel, and refused; and it is not alleged in the return that any specific act, constituting any offence against the laws of the United States, has been charged against him upon oath, but he appears to have been arrested upon general charges of treason and rebellion, without proof, and without giving the names of the witnesses, or specifying the acts which, in the judgment of the military officer, constituted these crimes. And having the prisoner thus in custody upon these vague and unsupported accusations, he refuses to obey the writ of habeas corpus, upon the ground that he is duly authorised by the President to suspend it.

The case, then, is simply this:—A military officer, residing in Pennsylvania, issues an order to arrest a citizen of Maryland upon vague and indefinite charges, without any proof, so far as appears. Under this order his house is entered in the night; he is seized as a prisoner, and conveyed to Fort M'Henry, and there kept in close confinement; and when a habeas corpus is served on the commanding officer, requiring him to produce the prisoner before a justice of the Supreme Court, in order that he may examine into the legality of the imprisonment, the answer of the officer is, that he is authorised by the President to suspend the writ of habeas corpus at his discretion, and, in the exercise of that discretion, suspends it in this case, and on that ground refuses obedience to the writ.

As the case comes before me, therefore, I understand that the President not only claims the right to suspend the writ of habeas corpus himself at his discretion, but to delegate that discretionary power to a military officer, and to leave it to him to determine whether he will or will not obey judicial process that may be served upon him.

No official notice has been given to the courts of justice, or to the public, by proclamation or otherwise, that the President claimed this power, and had exercised it in the manner stated in the return; and I certainly listened to it with some surprise, for I had supposed it to be one of those points of constitutional law upon which there was no difference of opinion, and that it was admitted on all hands that the privilege of the writ could not be suspended except by act of Congress.

When the conspiracy of which Aaron Burr was the head became so formidable, and was so extensively ramified as to justify, in Mr. Jefferson's opinion, the suspension of the writ, he claimed on his part no power to suspend it, but communicated his opinion to Congress, with all the proofs in his possession, in order that Congress might exercise its discretion upon the subject, and determine whether the public safety required it; and in the debate which took place upon the subject no one suggested that Mr. Jefferson might exercise the power himself, if in his opinion the public safety demanded it.

Having, therefore, regarded the question as too plain and too well settled to be open to dispute, if the commanding officer had stated that upon his own responsibility, and in the exercise of his own discretion, he refused obedience to the writ, I should have contented myself with referring to the clause in the constitution, and to the construction it received from every jurist and statesman of that day, when the case of Burr was before them; but being thus officially notified that the privilege of the writ has been suspended under the orders and by the authority of the President, and believing as I do that the President has exercised a power which he does not possess under the constitution, a proper respect for the high office he fills requires me to state plainly and fully the grounds of my opinion, in order to shew that I have not ventured to question the legality of his act without a careful and deliberate examination of the whole subject.

The clause of the constitution which authorises the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is in the 9th section of the 1st article.

This article is devoted to the legislative department of the United States, and has not the slightest reference to the executive department. It begins by providing, "that all legislative powers therein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives;" and after prescribing the manner in which these two branches of the legislative department shall be chosen, it proceeds to enumerate specifically the legislative powers which it thereby grants; and, at the conclusion of this specification, a clause is inserted giving Congress "the power to make all laws which may be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers vested by this constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or office thereof."

The power of legislation granted by this latter clause is by its words carefully confined to the specific objects before enumerated; but as this limitation was unavoidably somewhat indefinite, it was deemed necessary to guard more effectually certain great cardinal principles essential to the liberty of the citizen, and to the rights and equality of the States, by denying to Congress, in express terms, any power of legislation over them. It was apprehended, it seems, that such legislation might be attempted under the pretext that it was necessary and proper to carry into execution the powers granted; and it was determined that there should be no room to doubt where rights of such vital importance were concerned, and accordingly this clause is immediately followed by an enumeration of certain subjects to which the powers of legislation shall not extend; and the great importance which the framers of the constitution attached to the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus to protect the liberty of the citizen is proved by the fact that its suspension, except in cases of invasion or rebellion, is first in the list of prohibited powers; and even in these cases the power is denied, and its exercise prohibited, unless the public safety shall require it.

It is true that, in the cases mentioned, Congress is of necessity the judge of whether the public safety does or does not require it, and their judgment is conclusive; but the introduction of these words is a standing admonition to the legislative body of the danger of suspending it, and of the extreme caution they should exercise before they gave the government of the United States such power over the liberty of a citizen.

It is the second article of the constitution that provides for the organisation of the executive department, and enumerates the powers conferred on it, and prescribes its duties; and if the high power over the liberty of the citizen now claimed was intended to be conferred on the President, it would undoubtedly be found in plain words in this article; but there is not a word in it that can furnish the slightest ground to justify the exercise of the power.

The article begins by declaring that the executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America, to hold his office during the term of four years, and then proceeds to prescribe the mode of election, and to specify in precise and plain words the powers delegated to him, and the duties imposed upon him. And the short time for which he is elected, and the narrow limits to which his power is confined, shew the jealousy and apprehensions of future danger which the framers of the constitution felt in relation to that department of the government, and how carefully they withheld from it many of the powers belonging to the executive branch of the English government, which were considered as dangerous to the liberty of the subject, and conferred (and that in clear and specific terms) those powers only which were deemed essential to secure the successful operation of the government.

He is elected, as I have already said, for the brief term of four years, and is made personally responsible, by impeachment, for malfeasance in office. He is from necessity, and the nature of his duties, the commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and of the militia when called into actual service. But no appropriation for the support of the army can be made by Congress for a longer term than two years; so that it is in the power of the succeeding House of Representatives to withhold the appropriation for its support, and thus disband it, if in their judgment the President used or designed to use it for improper purposes. And although the militia, when in actual service, are under his command, yet the appointment of the officers is reserved to the States, as a security against the use of the military power for purposes dangerous to the liberties of the people or the rights of the States.

So, too, his powers in relation to the civil duties and authority necessarily conferred on him are carefully restricted, as well as those belonging to his military character. He cannot appoint the ordinary officers of government, nor make a treaty with a foreign nation or Indian tribe, without the advice and consent of the Senate, and cannot appoint even inferior officers unless he is authorised by an act of Congress to do so. He is not empowered to arrest any one charged with an offence against the United States, and whom he may, from the evidence before him, believe to be guilty; nor can he authorise any officer, civil or military, to exercise this power; for the fifth article of the amendments to the constitution expressly provides that no person "shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without the process of law"—that is, judicial process.

And even if the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus were suspended by act of Congress, and a party not subject to the rules and articles of war was afterwards arrested and imprisoned by regular judicial process, he could not be detained in prison or brought to trial before a military tribunal; for the article in the amendments to the constitution immediately following the one above referred to—that is, the sixth article—provides, that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favour; and to have the assistance of counsel for his defence."

And the only power, therefore, which the President possesses, where the "life, liberty, and property" of a private citizen is concerned, is the power and duty prescribed in the third section of the second article, which requires "that he shall take care that the laws shall be faithfully executed." He is not authorised to execute them himself, or through agents or officers, civil or military, appointed by himself, but he is to take care that they be faithfully carried into execution, as they are expounded and adjudged by the co-ordinate branch of the government to which that duty is assigned by the constitution. It is thus made his duty to come in aid of the judicial authority, if it shall be resisted by a force too strong to be overcome without the assistance of the executive arm; but in exercising this power he acts in subordination to judicial authority, assisting it to execute its process and enforce its judgments.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 7, 1861.

FOUR years have elapsed since the clause introduced by Lord St. Leonards into the Act to amend the Law relating to Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 21) has been in operation. By virtue of its provisions a wife deserted by her husband may obtain an order from a police magistrate when she is resident in the metropolis, or from the justices in petty sessions when she is resident in the country, and in all cases from the Divorce Court, whereby any money or property she may acquire by her own lawful industry, and any property which she may become possessed of after such desertion, may be protected and preserved to her separate use, both against her husband and his creditors.

Previous to the passing of this humane law many were the instances of wives who, after having been deserted by their husbands for many years, were heartlessly, but at the same time legally, despoiled by them of all the property which they might have acquired during the desertion, either by succession or from the exercise of their own industry and self-denial. So far as it goes, this measure of Lord St. Leonards has done much good; it has averted much misery, and it has afforded in many cases protection to those deeply in need of it.

We cannot, however, but think, that, after the experience we have now had, we might safely extend the remedies given to women by this enactment. Even if desertion on the part of the husband should be an essential condition precedent to protection being afforded to the wife, a rather wider definition should be legislatively given to the term "desertion" than our magistrates feel themselves, acting judicially, bound to put upon it. A recent decision, reported in one of the public newspapers, and, we presume, correctly, has been brought to our attention, in which, assuming the decision to be correct, a very palpable defect appears in the enactment as it now stands. The case came before Mr. Arnold, the magistrate for Westminster, and is reported as follows, with the appropriate heading, "A day too late:"—

"A middle-aged woman, of very respectable appearance, applied to the magistrate, under the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, for an order to protect her effects from her husband.

"Mr. Arnold.—How long has your husband been away from you?

"Applicant.—He deserted me two years ago, and I now very much stand in need of your assistance, as I do not wish him to have what I have got by my industry.

"Mr. Arnold.—When did you last hear from him?

"Applicant.—I have never heard from him since he left me; but he came back last night, and that is the reason I have come here this morning.

"Mr. Arnold.—You are just a day too late.

"Applicant.—Am I indeed, sir?

"Mr. Arnold.—Had you come yesterday, I could have granted you the protection you require.

"Applicant.—Can't you to-day?

"Mr. Arnold.—No, I cannot, indeed. You say your husband has returned.

"Applicant.—And that is the greater reason why I should have thought I could have protection, for he came to demand money of me.

"Mr. Arnold.—I cannot give you a protection order unless your husband has deserted you, and it must be given during the time that he is away. His having returned puts an end to the desertion, and deprives me of the power of granting the order.

"Applicant.—I am very sorry you cannot help me."

In the first place, with regard to the construction placed upon the act by the learned magistrate, we cannot say that we approve of it. Look at the words of the statute:—"A wife deserted by her husband may, at any time after" (not during) "such desertion, make an application for an order to protect property," &c. "which she may become possessed of after" (not during) "such desertion; and the magistrate, if satisfied of the fact of such desertion, and that the same was" (not is) "without reasonable cause, and that the wife is maintaining herself," &c., "may make an order protecting her earnings and property acquired since the commencement of the desertion."

Now, in this case the wife had clearly been deserted by her husband; the application was made after the desertion, and therefore seems to us clearly to come within the very words of the act.

But assuming that the desertion must continue until the time of the application, can the husband be said to have put an end to it by his acts in this case, where he seems to have returned, not for the purpose of remaining with and maintaining his wife, but simply for the purpose of robbing her of her earnings?

Assuming, however, that the magistrate is right, and that the words of the enactment are not sufficiently clear or strong to deprive the husband of his marital right by common law to strip his wife of her property, does not such a state of the law clearly call for amendment? As is well observed by a learned writer, to whom more than any one we are indebted for the present change in the law*, "the injury in such cases done to the wife is not the desertion, but the re-appearance of the husband, and the tyrannical use made of the marital power. The wife seeks protection, not because the husband has gone away, but because he has come back and plundered her, or may do both."

It is, however, full time that we should consider whether the law, which is found to work well in France, should not either wholly or partially be introduced into England, whereby the wife, if the husband, although living with her, takes to squandering, may be able to obtain, in a summary mode, a division of the moveable property, and have the administration of her own fortune committed to herself. As the law now stands, as long as a husband does no violence to his wife, he may take all her property not settled to her separate use; he may seize her earnings, and apply for his own vicious and sensual gratification the money gained by her hard labour for the maintenance and support of the family. The desertion of such a husband—and there are not a few of such a description—would, so that it were permanent, be a blessing to his wife and family; but such persons often prefer "constant adherence" to perpetual exile; and the wife must toil on in her hopeless task, pitied by all who know her, but unaided by the law.

We think that where a wife can shew that her husband is applying her earnings and property, not for the maintenance of the family, but for his own purposes, and that her earnings and property are intercepted, or are liable to be intercepted, by her husband or his creditors, she ought at once, in a summary manner, to be able to obtain protection against their interference. These things are better managed in France—"A French washerwoman, pestered by an idle, drunken husband, wipes the soap off her arms, leaves her work for half an hour, and returns with a certificate which protects her wages. An Englishwoman has no resource but to make her terms with the vagabond; so long as he only robs her, and does her no violence, the law holds him to be acting in his right†."

The only persons who could complain against the proposed alteration in the law would be the husband and his creditors; and it might also be objected that it would give rise to matrimonial quarrels and family dissensions.

If an order, during cohabitation, protecting the wife's property, were made in a proper case, any complaint of the husband, almost a concession, is inadmissible; and with regard to the creditors of the husband, it can, perhaps, scarcely be supposed that they would allow him to contract debts with them upon the faith of his wife's earnings or property; or, if they did do so, few persons, we believe, would consider that, as against the wife, they are entitled to the aid or consideration of the law.

With regard to the effect of such orders upon the family peace, it has been found from experience, in France, that "they do not disturb domestic happiness†." Nor do we think that the result would be otherwise in England; at any rate, the industrious wife is entitled to all the protection that a well-considered law would afford her; and we hope that Lord St. Leonards will again turn his attention towards the improvement of the humane law which he so wisely introduced into Parliament.

Review.

Roscoe's Digest of the Law of Evidence in Criminal Cases. Fifth Edition, with considerable Additions. By DAVID POWER, Esq., one of her Majesty's Counsel, Recorder of Ipswich.

[V. & R. Stevens & Sons; Sweet; and Maxwell. 1861.]

WE have postponed noticing this work until the fate of the bills for the consolidation and amendment of a considerable portion of the criminal law should be decided. They have now passed into law, and form the stats. 24 & 25 Vict. cc. 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100.

The treatises of the late Mr. Roscoe on Evidence at Nisi Prius, and on Evidence in Criminal Cases, are too well known to need comment; their success during so many years, in which they have gone through so large a number of editions, is the best testimony to their merits, for the purpose for which they were designed—namely, not as formal treatises on the great and difficult subject of Evidence, but as valuable practical digests adapted for ready use in court or on circuit. The present is the fifth edition of the treatise on

* Macqueen on Divorce, p. 97, 1st ed.; extract from The Times, 18th March, 1857.

† Macqueen on Divorce, p. 140, 1st ed.

Criminal Evidence, the companion treatise being now in its tenth edition; but then it should be remembered, that the former had a powerful rival in Archbold's Criminal Pleading, while the latter had, comparatively speaking, no rival at all. In the present edition, the editor, Mr. D. Power, Q. C., who also edited the previous one, has had, as he informs us in the advertisement, the assistance of Mr. Markby, of the Norfolk Circuit, for which he acknowledges himself greatly indebted.

Mr. Roscoe's treatise on Criminal Evidence, as is well known, is divided into three parts, the first containing the "General Rules of Evidence;" the second, "Evidence in particular Prosecutions" (arranged in alphabetical order); and the third, "General Matters of Defence." In the advertisement to the present edition we are told that "the introductory portion of the work has been re-arranged, with the view of rendering it more readable to the student of criminal law, and more easy of reference to all who may have occasion to consult it." The only change in the general heading of the first part is, that instead of the first title, "Primary and Secondary Evidence," the present edition contains two titles, denominated respectively "Best Evidence" and "Secondary Evidence"—a decided improvement; for, in all the previous editions, the important rule, which requires the best evidence to be given, instead of being treated as, what it undoubtedly is, a fundamental principle running through the whole law of evidence, is apparently confined to the case where secondary evidence of the contents of written documents is excluded until the absence of the primary evidence is accounted for.

We have alluded to the recent statutes for the consolidation and amendment of the criminal law. The advertisement to the present edition bears date the 10th April, 1861, and those acts are dated the 6th August, 1861, whence it appears that the publication of the work may be considered as having taken place almost on the eve of the statutes. This is a fortunate circumstance in one respect, namely, that the work may be looked on as bringing the law down to the passing of the statutes, on the construction of which some time must necessarily elapse before any cases can be reported, and a much longer period before they can be even tolerably expounded by judicial authority. Add to this, that those statutes do not effect much alteration in the nature of the offences treated of in the work, or the evidence by which accusations of them are to be supported or rebutted, the changes effected by them being chiefly with reference to the punishment of those offences. For the purposes of practice, therefore, what the professional man at this moment requires is the present or some similar treatise, shewing the state of the pre-existing law on the subjects to which the statutes relate, as well as to the other subjects which are unaffected by them; together with copies of the statutes, either as they are issued by the Queen's printer, or, as they doubtless will be, commented on by treatises emanating from members of the Profession. By the time a fresh edition of the work will be called for, those statutes, with their judicial interpretations, can easily be incorporated into it.

Like all others, the present work is not only not free from typographical inaccuracies, but has imperfections of its own. Thus we do not see in it any statement of the fact that counsel in a cause are competent witnesses; at least, we cannot find the case of Cobbett v. Hudson (1 El. & Bl. 11), where this doctrine was established, nor the cases of Stones v. Byron (4 Dowl. & L. 393) and Dunn v. Packwood (11 Jur. 242), which it overrules; and this omission is the more remarkable, as Cobbett v. Hudson is cited for another point at p. 140. At p. 120 also is the following passage from Alison's Criminal Law of Scotland (p. 436)—"With regard to those persons who are afflicted with monomania, or an aberration of mind on one particular subject (not touching the matter in question) and whose judgment in other respects is correct, the safest rule appears to be to exclude their testimony, it being impossible to calculate with accuracy the extent and influence of such a state of mind." In the absence of express authority on the above subject in our own law, this passage might have been properly inserted, and indeed is to be found in former editions of the work under consideration; although even then the doctrine contained in it was very questionable on principle; but that doctrine has been completely overturned by the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal in Rex v. Hill (2 Den. C. C. 254)—a case which, indeed, is referred to by Mr. Power, but the important principle established by it is not brought out with sufficient distinctness. On the subject of notice to produce documents, we think that the important case of Dwyer v. Collins (7 Exch. 639) ought not to have been omitted. Moreover, when dealing with the subject of the proof of the laws of other countries, mention ought to have been made of the Law Ascertainment Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63. For the non-appearance in this work of the recent important act on that subject, the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 11, the editor is not responsible, as it had not received the royal assent at the time of publication.

UNITED STATES LAW REPORTS.

(Concluded from p. 335).

With such provisions in the constitution, expressed in language too clear to be misunderstood by any one, I can see no ground whatever for supposing that the President, in any emergency or in any state of things, can authorise the suspension of the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus, or arrest a citizen, except in aid of the judicial power. He certainly does not faithfully execute the laws if he takes upon himself legislative power by suspending the writ of habeas corpus, and the judicial power also by arresting and imprisoning a person without due process of law. Nor can any argument be drawn from the nature of sovereignty, or the necessity of government, for self-defence in times of tumult and danger. The government of the United States is one of delegated and limited powers; it derives its existence and authority altogether from the constitution, and neither of its branches, executive, legislative, or judicial, can exercise any of the powers of government beyond those specified and granted; for the tenth article of the amendments to the constitution in express terms provides, that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Indeed, the security against imprisonment by executive authority provided for in the fifth article of the amendments to the constitution, which I have before quoted, is nothing more than a copy of a like provision in the English constitution which had been firmly established before the declaration of independence.

[The Chief Justice here cites several authorities, viz. 1 Bl. Com. 133; 3 Bl. Com. 133, 134; 4 Hallam's Const. Hist. 9; 3 Story's Const., s. 1336; and Ex parte Bollman (4 Cranch, 95, 101).]

But the documents before me shew that the military authority in this case has gone far beyond the mere suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. It has, by force of arms, thrust aside the judicial authorities and officers, to whom the constitution has confided the power and duty of interpreting and administering the laws, and substituted a military government in its place, to be administered and executed by military officers; for at the time these proceedings were had against John Merryman, the district judge of Maryland, the commissioner appointed under the act of Congress, the district attorney, and the marshal, all resided in the city of Baltimore, a few miles only from the home of the prisoner. Up to that time there had never been the slightest resistance or obstruction to the process of any court or judicial officer of the United States in Maryland, except by the military authority; and if a military officer, or any other person, had reason to believe that the prisoner had committed any offence against the laws of the United States, it was his duty to give information of the fact, and the evidence to support it, to the district attorney; and it would then have become the duty of that officer to bring the matter before the district judge or commissioner; and if there was sufficient legal evidence to justify his arrest, the judge or commissioner would have issued his warrant to the marshal to arrest him, and upon the hearing of the case would have held him to bail, or committed him for trial, according to the character of the offence as it appeared in the testimony, or would have discharged him immediately if there was not sufficient evidence to support the accusation. There was no danger of any obstruction or resistance to the action of the civil authorities, and therefore no reason whatever for the interposition of the military.

And yet, under these circumstances, a military officer, stationed in Pennsylvania, without giving any information to the district attorney, and without any application to the judicial authorities, assumes to himself the judicial power in the district of Maryland, undertakes to decide what constitutes the crime of treason or rebellion—what evidence (if, indeed, he required any) is sufficient to support the accusation and justify the commitment—and commits the party, without a hearing even before himself, to close custody in a strongly-garrisoned fort, to be there held, it would seem, during the pleasure of those who committed him.

The constitution provides, as I have before said, that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." It declares that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated; and no warrant shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized." It provides that the party accused shall be entitled to a speedy trial in a court of justice.

And these great and fundamental laws, which Congress itself could not suspend, have been disregarded and suspended, like the writ of habeas corpus, by a military order, supported by force of arms. Such is the case now before me, and I can only say that if the authority which the constitution has confided to the judiciary department and judicial officers may thus, upon any pretext or under any circumstances, be usurped by the military power at its discretion, the people of the United States are no longer living under a government of laws, but every citizen holds life, liberty, and property at the will and pleasure of the army officer in whose military district he may happen to be found.

In such a case my duty was too plain to be mistaken. I have exercised all the power which the constitution and laws confer upon me, but that power has been resisted by a force too strong for me to overcome. It is possible that the officer who has incurred this grave responsibility may have misunderstood his instructions, and exceeded the authority intended to be given him. I shall, therefore, order all the proceedings in this case, with my opinion, to be filed and recorded in the Circuit Court of the United States for the district of Maryland, and direct the clerk to transmit a copy, under seal, to the President of the United States. It will then remain for that high officer, in fulfilment of his constitutional obligation, to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed"—to determine what measures he will take to cause the civil process of the United States to be respected and enforced.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 14, 1861.

PROFESSIONAL men owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Hubbard for the spirit and ability with which he has fought their cause against the disheartening opposition of an unfairly constituted committee. He has failed to procure a report in favour of his proposed amendment of the income tax; but he has produced, perhaps unintentionally, an effect of greater ultimate value by exposing the necessary injustice and absurdity of an income tax in any shape, and by wringing from the adverse majority in the committee the confession, that "they feel so strongly the dangers and ill consequences to be apprehended from an attempt to unsettle the present basis of the tax, without a clear perception of the mode in which it is to be reconstructed, that they are not prepared to offer any suggestion for its amendment;" and that "the objections which are urged against the tax are objections to its nature and essence, rather than to the particular shape which has been given to it"—a confession of which the full value is only seen when, upon searching the report, it appears that the committee cannot produce a single argument in answer to the objections urged against the existing tax.

Mr. Hubbard assumes as conceded the principle that the tax known as the property and income tax is intended to be a tax upon income only, and, so far as it falls upon capital, sins not only against principle and expediency, but against consistency and the expressed intention of the Legislature; and he takes perhaps superfluous pains to shew that the expression "income and property tax" ought not to be regarded as sanctioning any taxation of capital. The expression, however, is a mere official inaccuracy, and is not justified by anything to be found in the acts under which the tax is raised. The principal act is intitled "An Act for granting to her Majesty Duties on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades, and Offices," and the tax is imposed, in Schedules (A.) and (B.), upon "every 20s. of the annual value" of lands, tenements, and hereditaments; in Schedule (C.), "upon all profits arising from annuities, dividends, &c.; in Schedule (D.), "upon the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to any person from any kind of property, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation;" and in Schedule (E.), upon public offices or employments of profit and pensions. The expression "property tax" was applicable to some of the impositions contained in Mr. Pitt's first act of 1798 (38 Geo. 3, c. 16), which, however, was aimed rather at expenditure than at property, and, being found unequal and imperfect in its operation, was repealed by the act of the 39 Geo. 3, c. 13, expressly granting duties upon "income" only. In the lately United States of North America the principal revenue of each State is raised by a property tax. Assessors elected by the people ascertain the saleable value of each separate holding of real property within their district, and also, with the assistance of returns from the parties to be charged, the clear value of all personal property, of whatever kind, owned by each taxable individual, after allowing for debts and property exempt by law from execution. The tax is levied rateably upon the values so ascertained. Income is not taxed, but only property. It is easy to see why a democratic legislature would prefer to tax property rather than income. In England the burthen of taxation has fallen principally, where it ought to fall, upon expenditure. The tax now under consideration, however, is intended and expressed to be a tax neither upon property nor expenditure, but upon income, the means of expenditure.

Assuming, then, that income alone ought to be subject to the tax, and also assuming that every injustice and inequality in the incidence of a tax ought to be removed as far as can be done, without regard to the objection that other inequalities are not corrected, or even that other inequalities of minor importance may be incidentally slightly aggravated—a proposition which Mr. J. S. Mill forcibly expressed in his examination before the committee in these terms—"I think it highly desirable, in every plan of approximating taxation to justice, that a just principle should be carried out so far as it can go—that is, to the point at which it is stopped by insurmountable obstacles; but if other means fail, and it is thought there are insurmountable obstacles to doing absolute justice in a particular case, I am forced to give way to them, but not for that reason to relax my support of what I consider justice in cases in which it is practicable"—Mr. Hubbard thus indicates certain defects of the present Income-tax Acts, and the practicable remedies:—

"1. Capital given as the consideration for annuities terminable by lapse of years or lapse of life is taxed in the annuity through which it is being repaid with interest.

"2. Capital in course of realisation through the working of mines is taxed in the assessment of the entire value of the produce.

"3. The portion of land rent applied to the maintenance of the property, insurance, and repairs, is taxed, though not available as income.

"4. The portion of house rent applied to the maintenance of the property, insurance, and repairs, is taxed, although not available as income.

"5. Rent paid in the shape of fines is assessed in the hands of the lessor, although the full annual value of the property may have been already taxed in the hands of the lessee or tenant.

"6. Industrial earnings are taxed to their full extent, although their dependence on the life and efficiency of those whose labour is indispensable to their production requires that a considerable portion be annually saved, such portion, when invested as capital, being again taxed in its subsequent products."

The remedy for these defects being—

"1. The disallowance of deduction in respect of income tax on the payment of so much of a terminable annuity as consists of capital repaid.

"2. An allowance on the annual produce of mines in respect of the exhaustion of the mineral, to the extent of one-fifth for metallic mines, except ironstone, and one-tenth for ironstone, coal, slate, and stone.

"3. An allowance of one-tenth of the rental of land for outgoings, and, in the case of a benefice, of 100*l.* a year for a curate.

"4. An allowance of one-sixth of the rental of houses for outgoings.

"5. A remission of the tax on fines when the occupier pays a rack-rent.

"6. An allowance of one-third on industrial incomes, excluding, of course, the profits on dividends of joint-stock companies."

The contention in and before the committee was principally upon the first and the last of these proposed amendments. The proposal to deduct one-third from industrial incomes is based upon the obvious distinction between the condition of a person who creates an income by his own industry, and that of one who derives income from property, whether belonging to himself or to another. It is true that the owner of an income derived from property may have no more than a life interest in the property, his income being only less uncertain than that of the man of business by the absence of the contingency of ceasing from ill-health or age; but the grand distinction between the two classes lies in this—that the industrial class, as a whole, is a saving class; the class of life tenants, as a whole, is not a saving class. Men of business put by, according to the average selected by Mr. Hubbard, one-third of their net income in the shape of savings; they convert it into capital, which is taxed on the income it produces, and which ought not to be taxed in its nascent state as income, because it is not practically income available for expenditure, the only legitimate subject of an income tax. The class of life tenants consists, in the main, of persons having an interest in real or personal property, the corpus of which belongs to some relation or relations existing or expected. They are at least exempt from the necessity of saving a provision for their old age, and in the majority of cases the capital from which they derive their income is settled as a provision for their children, and thus the other principal inducement to save is removed; or, generally, it may be said that the savings of the country, or the annual additions to its capital, are derived mainly from industrial income, and very inconsiderably from the income of land or capital. The claim, therefore, of the owners of industrial incomes to an allowance is great, unquestionable, and practically admissible; that of the owners of life interests in property is small, and also inadmissible, on account of the impossibility in practice of distinguishing between the few cases in which it might reasonably be allowed in full, and the many in which no allowance ought to be made. But the impossibility of giving relief to a few individual cases in one class, though a good ground of objection to an income tax in any shape, cannot be urged against the relief of a large and well-defined class, to every individual of which it is justly due.

The case of purchasers of annuities for life or years stands on a different ground, and, curiously enough, the distinction has been taken by the Government in its own favour only. In 1846 Parliament voted an advance of 3,000,000*l.* to be lent to the landowners of Great Britain at an interest of 3*l.* per cent., repayable in twenty-two years. The transaction between the Government and the landowners was, therefore, the purchase of an annuity of 65*l.* during twenty-two years for every 1000*l.* advanced; and the law as it then stood (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, s. 60) authorised the landowner to deduct an amount equal to the income tax on this 65*l.* per annum from each annual payment. But the Income-tax Act of 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, s. 42), referring to these loans alone, and reciting truly enough that the annual payments are made up of capital repaid as well as interest, reduces the authorised deduction to one-third. But in the case of terminable annuities charged under Schedule (C.), the Government still deduct the duty from the annual instalment of principal; and in the case of annuities granted by companies or private individuals for valuable consideration, the annual payment of which, therefore, consists mainly of capital repaid, the annuitant is still liable to a deduction, in the name of income tax, from his capital, although the grantor of the annuity only pays the tax on his net income, and pockets for his own use the per-centage which he has kept back out of the instalments of capital. That the attempt to correct these obvious anomalies should be deliberately affirmed by the representatives of the Government to be dangerous is one of the many proofs which the existing as well as some other Governments have given of the smallness of the measure of wisdom under which a great country will submit to be governed. The draft report proposed by Mr. Lowe is worthy of careful perusal, for it shews that a man may continue for many years in the practice of smart speaking, with the advantage of official practice, and yet never be able to stumble upon a sensible conclusion, or to reason consistently through the space of two consecutive syllogisms.

The alterations suggested by Mr. Hubbard would doubtless be real amendments, but at the best they would only be palliatives of a radically vicious tax—a tax erroneous in principle, unequal in incidence, and, above all, demoralising in practice. A large portion of the revenue of the country is derived from real property and from capital. The income from these sources is capable of very considerable increase prospectively, without injustice to individuals. For instance, real property advances in value as the population and wealth of the country in which it lies increase, without any assistance from the owner of it; and a considerable portion of this increased value might from time to time be justly appropriated for public purposes. The necessary revenue which state property, the taxes upon real estate and upon other property now in existence, and taxes upon successions, are insufficient to supply, ought unquestionably to be raised, as far as practicable, by a tax upon expenditure. Whether we regard the enjoyment which a man derives under the protection of social government, or the injury which he does to his fellow-subjects by destroying a portion of the total stock of commodities, it is plain that no measure of the amount of his obligations to society can be so natural and just as the value of the labour, or of the products of labour, that he appropriates to his own use. And if half the ingenuity which has been expended in devising or defending schemes for direct taxation had been applied to the improvement of our indirect taxes, the problem of an easy and just system of taxation might have been already solved. When it is considered that in a country enjoying liberal institutions it is impossible permanently to impose the burthen of any tax upon unskilled labourers, and that the wages of unskilled labour regulate the price of every product of industry, it will perhaps be seen that the solution of the problem is to be sought in a tax upon the necessities of life.

WHARTON'S LAW LEXICON.—Second Edition.

In royal 8vo., 1860, price 11. 5s.,

THE LAW LEXICON; or, DICTIONARY of JURISPRUDENCE; explaining the Technical Words and Phrases employed in the several Departments of English Law; including the various Legal Terms used in Commercial Transactions. Together with an Explanatory as well as Literal Translation of the Latin Maxims contained in the Writings of the Ancient and Modern Commentators. By J. S. WHARTON, Esq., M.A., Oxon, Barrister at Law, Author of "The Articled Clerk's Manual," &c. Second Edition, enlarged.

"The task was one of the utmost difficulty, and, upon the whole, Mr. Wharton has achieved it in a creditable manner. Law students will find it of the utmost utility, for there is scarcely any subject relating to law on which they may not here obtain useful information, or, at all events, a hint as to where to look for it. . . . We must not omit to notice the very large number of legal maxims which the book contains. They are always accompanied by a good translation, and sometimes by illustrations of the manner in which they have been applied. Articled clerks, who have not had the benefit of a complete classical education, will be thankful to Mr. Wharton for the manner in which he has discharged this part of his task."—Solicitors' Journal, Jan. 7, 1860.

"Mr. Wharton did not undertake a superfluous toil when he imposed upon himself the enormous labour of getting up a new Law Dictionary, or, as he prefers to call it, a Law Lexicon. The proof that it was wanted, and that he has succeeded in supplying the want, is found in the fact that a second edition has been called for. In this he has introduced many corrections of errors, unavoidable in so large a labour, and numerous additions suggested by readers, as well as by his own researches; and it may now be pronounced the most complete Law Dictionary we possess, and therefore entitled to preference by all who purpose to add that useful and almost indispensable book of reference to their libraries."—Law Times, Feb. 11, 1860.

"It is with sincere gratification that we call attention to Mr. Wharton's Law Lexicon, and we rejoice to see that it is so far appreciated by the public that a second edition has been called for. In a law dictionary there are two simple objects to be attained, viz. the information and the convenience of the reader; and we think Mr. Wharton has eminently succeeded in uniting these qualities. A series of imperfect treatises on jurisprudence is not the desideratum in a work of this kind, and Mr. Wharton has managed admirably to steer clear of the temptation to dissertation that besets law and lawyers. His subjects are treated with most commendable simplicity, and with a regard to facts alone, that might be more often imitated with advantage. It is difficult to criticise a lexicon; but, after a careful examination, we may say that we have been unable to find a single instance of a legal word or subject that has been omitted. Moreover, there is a vast quantity of information on subjects occupying the boundary between law and the other sciences, and a copious vocabulary of words in the French, Latin, and Saxon languages, while even Jewish and Mohammedan law has not been forgotten. The method and arrangement are admirable—the instruction of the reader has been the sole object consulted; he is not annoyed by confusing references backward and forward from one subject to another, but, look out what word he will, he may rely upon finding a brief and able exposition of its meaning, and of its bearing upon law. The references are not sown broadcast with that overwhelming hand we are accustomed to see, which savours rather of the writer's claim to erudition than any actual acquaintance with his authorities. Mr. Wharton gives sufficient authorities, and exact references on all important matters. In fine, we think he has succeeded in the object he proposed to himself—that of 'preserving a due medium between a scanty vocabulary of mere words, and a prolix cyclopædia of exhaustive discussions.' We feel sure his book will be useful to the legal profession, and to many beyond it."—The Leader, Feb. 18, 1860.

"Mr. Wharton is entitled to the thanks of the Profession for placing before them a Law Dictionary of portable dimensions, and one that they can refer to with a certainty of finding what they require. . . . By his present performance, which is a monument of patient industry, extensive learning, and unwearied research, he has shown himself well fitted to fill the office of lexicographer to the Profession. Such an office has been sadly wanted for some time past. Let the Profession be grateful they have secured so efficient an assistant as Mr. Wharton."—Legislator, No. 39.

THE CONSOLIDATED GENERAL ORDERS of the HIGH COURT of CHANCERY; with Regulations as to certain Fees and Charges.

"The new arrangement of the Orders leaves nothing to be wished for: it is clear, convenient, and admirably adapted for the purposes of practice. Although the language of the old Orders has been adhered to as far as possible, it has been altered whenever it was found necessary for the purpose of adapting them to the present practice, and also for the purpose of removing those doubts and difficulties which so frequently arise under the old Orders."—Jurist, Jan. 11, 1860.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 21, 1861.

THE provisions in stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 13, 14, which entitle a creditor who obtains a judgment or charging order to the same remedies in a court of equity against the debtor's hereditaments, or the fund affected by the order, as he would be entitled to in case the debtor had by writing agreed to charge the same with the debt and interest, have too often been read as if they gave to the judgment or order the effect of an express charge by the debtor on the hereditaments in which he was interested at the date of the judgment, or on the stock or fund in which he was interested at the date of the charging order, instead of being a charge merely on such interest in the hereditaments or fund as the debtor was entitled to at the time. Even Lord Cottenham fell into that mistake, and, in spite of the discussion which followed his famous dictum in Whitworth v. Gaugain (Cr. & Ph. 325; 1 Ph. 728), the true scope and limits of those enactments have since been occasionally misconceived by other eminent judges. Thus, in Watts v. Porter (3 El. & Bl. 743), the majority of the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench repeated Lord Cottenham's mistake, and decided that the effect of a charging order on stock held by trustees for the debtor was such as to enable the creditor who obtained it, by giving notice to the trustees, to defeat a prior charge on the stock in favour of another person who had omitted to give notice. We discussed this case at the time (1 Jur., N. S., part 2, pp. 313, 322, 330), and it has since been overruled (Deacon v. Lord Oxford, 2 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 121; 6 De G., Mac., & G. 493; Kinderley v. Jervis, 22 Beav. 1; Scott v. Hastings, 4 Kay & J. 633). In the case of Warburton v. Hill (Kay, 470) the Court seems to have been under the same misapprehension which led astray the Court of Queen's Bench. There a solicitor, against whom Wickens, a creditor, had obtained a judgment, assigned to the creditor in 1851 all the costs, charges, expenses, and sums of money due or to become due to him in certain suits. In April, 1853, he obtained an order for the taxation of his costs in the suits, and payment out of funds standing in the Accountant-General's name. In July, 1853, Perrin, another creditor, obtained an order charging the solicitor's interest in the fund in court; and in August in the same year Guildford, a third creditor, obtained a similar order. Both of these orders were duly notified to the Accountant-General as soon as they were obtained. It was stated in evidence, that on the application to make the charging orders absolute at the judge's chambers, Wickens appeared, and made an affidavit, in which his security was set forth. It was contended in argument, that as Perrin had not given notice of his charge to the Accountant-General, he ought to be postponed to the other incumbrancer. The Vice-Chancellor (Sir W. P. Wood) held that Wickens had not lost his priority. "It appears to me," said his Honor, "that the question of notice to the Accountant-General is not material. Looking to the operation of the statute, notice having been acquired by Perrin and Guildford of the prior assignment to Wickens before their charging orders were made absolute, there can be no doubt upon the question of priority of charge." And, after citing and commenting on the enactment, his Honor further said, "The real charge is acquired when the charging order is made absolute, and then it is as though under the hand of the owner of the stock. If, therefore, a creditor goes to his debtor, and he is honest, and says, 'I will give you all I can,' and makes an assignment of the fund in court to him, the creditor is in the same position as if he had obtained a charging order." And his Honor then proceeded to shew, that a person having notice of a prior charge on a trust fund, which had not been notified to the trustee, could not avail himself of the doctrine of the cases of Dearle v. Hall (3 Russ. 1) and Lovridge v. Cooper (Id. 30). Now, the decision in favour of Wickens was unquestionably right, but the reasons given for it involved a confusion of the effect of a charge under the statute with that of an express charge by the deed. The statute is not intended to operate unjustly—to take away from an incumbrancer any rights which he has at the time when the statutory charge is imposed—it merely charges in favour of the creditor who obtains the order such interest in the fund as the debtor is at the time beneficially entitled to, and does not charge any interest which the debtor has previously disposed of. The effect of the charging order, therefore, is not the same as that of an assignment by the debtor of the fund in court, but only the same as that of an assignment by the debtor of all such beneficial interest as the debtor has at the time in the fund—a very different thing. In the recent case of Benham v. Keane (18th April, 1861, not yet reported) the same learned judge has removed the doubts suggested by his judgment in Warburton v. Hill, by deciding, on the most conclusive reasoning, that, in a contest for priority, notice to a judgment creditor is immaterial. There the contest was between two judgment creditors seeking payment out of land in a register county, the judgment which was prior in date not having been registered, and therefore, according to the literal terms of the Registry Act, and also according to the recent authorities, not entitling the creditor to an elegit, even as against the debtor himself. For the act (7 Ann. c. 20, s. 18) says, "that no judgment, &c. shall affect or bind any honours, &c. in Middlesex, but only from the time that a memorial of such judgment, &c. shall be entered at the said register office, expressing and containing," &c. It was long thought that this enactment, like those giving priority to registered conveyances, would be inoperative in favour of persons having notice, and the late Vice-Chancellor of England so decided in the case of Tunstall v. Trappes (3 Sim. 301), holding that he was bound by the decisions in the cases of Le Neve v. Le Neve (3 Atk. 646) and Davis v. Strathmore (16 Ves. 419). Le Neve v. Le Neve, however, related to a conveyance, and not a judgment; and Davis v. Strathmore was a decision on the Docketing Acts. Tunstall v. Trappes has been overruled by Johnson v. Holdsworth (1 Sim., N. S., 110), Westbrooke v. Blythe (3 El. & Bl. 737), and Hughes v. Lumley (4 El. & Bl. 274), which have placed the construction of the enactments in the Middlesex and Yorkshire Registry Acts with respect to judgments on the same footing as that of the similarly worded provision in the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 19, that judgments which are not registered in the Common Pleas shall be inoperative under that act. If in Benham v. Keane the creditor whose judgment was registered had been opposed by a person entitled to a prior charge created by an unregistered document, his registered judgment would not have availed him.

In the province of Upper Canada there is a legislative provision for the registration of assurances, which is borrowed from our Registry Acts, and for the most part expressed in the same terms; but in the revised statutes of that province (22 Vict. c. 89) there is a provision postponing, in express terms, the claim of a purchaser under an unregistered deed to those of subsequent creditors under a judgment which is registered. It is difficult to see the justice or policy of this enactment, the effect of which would be, that a purchaser by an unregistered conveyance in 1860 would be liable to an elegit at the suit of a creditor of his vendor under a judgment obtained in 1880. Our own recent legislation has more wisely restrained and limited the lien of judgment creditors.

THE ARRANGEMENT CLAUSES IN THE NEW BANKRUPTCY ACT.

(From a Correspondent).

By the new Bankruptcy Act there are four modes of arrangement between debtor and creditors provided—two of them after, and two without, an actual bankruptcy. In regard to arrangements without actual bankruptcy, there seems to be but little improvement upon the provisions of the act of 1849. Sects. 192 to 200 are those applicable to these arrangements. Now, although the earlier portion of the former section speaks of a deed between debtor and creditors, relating to several matters, including "the debts or liabilities of the debtor, and his release therefrom," or to "any of such matters," and therefore of a deed relating to the debtor's release from his "debts and liabilities," and to nothing else, this seems overriden by the 197th section, providing that the creditors, in all matters relating to the debtor's estate and effects, shall have the benefit of all the provisions of the act, in the same or like manner as if, the debtor being bankrupt, they had proved on his estate; and that as between themselves and the bankrupt, and against third persons, they are to have the same rights with respect to the debtor's estate as are possessed by creditors in bankruptcy.

Such, at all events, was the effect of the introduction into the 228th section of the act of 1849 of a direction that "joint and separate estates shall be distributed in like manner as in bankruptcy," upon the arrangement by deed clauses contained in that act.

It is submitted that a binding deed under the 192nd section must be to the effect of the model deed prescribed by sect. 200*.

With regard to the manner in which such a deed will operate, it is to be observed that the debtor, as well as the creditors and trustees, is to have the same rights in respect of his estate as he would have had if a bankrupt. Under the 194th and 195th sections of the act of 1849 he had these rights independent of any consent of his creditors. The numbers of these sections do not appear in Schedule (G.) of the new act, but their provisions seem to be inconsistent with the 109th and 178th sections of the new act, and therefore to be repealed. This being so, the debtor will have no right to an allowance for maintenance, or a percentage on the dividend, unless these be granted to him by resolutions of the creditors, at, it is presumed, meetings duly held for the purpose, after public advertisements. The creditors' assignee in bankruptcy must work gratuitously, but the creditors may appoint a paid manager to assist him. At present many deeds of arrangement are worked on commission by professional accountants, who are themselves the trustees, the deed itself providing for their remuneration. Under the model deed in Schedule (D.) to the new act this course will not be practicable, and it would appear necessary to make a creditor the trustee, the body of creditors empowering him at a meeting to employ an accountant, with remuneration. It would seem, too, that the money received by the trustee must be paid into the Bank to the credit of the accountant in bankruptcy, and that the only practical difference between an arrangement by deed and a formal bankruptcy is in the debtor's exemption from amenability to the criminal provisions of the act.

* [We agree with our correspondent in his conclusion, that the deed must provide for the distribution of all the debtor's estate among all his creditors; but we think that there is no reason for extending the condition of adopting the model deed to cases not within the express purview of the 200th section. The clauses, however, from 192 to 200 inclusive are nearly unintelligible, and must be licked into shape by the courts.]

The earlier portions of sect. 110 contemplate the suspension of the proceedings in bankruptcy upon the bankrupt himself making a proposal which shall appear acceptable to the majority in value of the creditors present at the meeting; but the latter part of the section directs that "the estate and effects shall be wound up and administered," and that the bankrupt shall be entitled to apply for his discharge after "having made a full disclosure of his estate." For the reasons above suggested with reference to the 192nd section, it is submitted that under this section a money composition cannot be forced upon an unwilling creditor. It is difficult to see what the object of this section can be: all that can be done under it seems capable of accomplishment under the 185th and following sections.

These last-named sections appear to be more carefully expressed, and to render comparatively unimportant any infelicity in the terms of the other sections referring to arrangements. It is to be observed that this is the only portion of the act giving the Court power to entertain any question as to the reasonableness of a proposed arrangement. Those already spoken of provide for arrangements between the debtor and creditors alone, the Court having nothing to do beyond superintending their execution when called upon. This circumstance goes far to justify the policy of requiring the distribution of the whole of the debtor's estate in every other form of arrangement.

The scheme contained in these sections appears well matured and extremely practicable, and likely to be very frequently adopted. It is worth all the trouble and expectation the country has endured on the subject of bankruptcy reform. It protects any creditor, who may have good cause to resist a debtor's proposal for a whitewash, from being overborne by the debtor's friends into an unreasonable compromise; and more than that, it gives the Court the very important power to deal with the conduct of the bankrupt under the criminal provisions, although the liquidation of the estate may take place out of court.

It gives the Court power to entertain any question arising in the course of carrying out the arrangement, enabling the parties to obtain a judicial solution of the difficulties in a summary manner in the district courts, and without resort to the court in London. It also enables any party to obtain the moderation of the charges of any attorney, auctioneer, or accountant employed in the arrangement, and the proper investigation of the accounts of the liquidators, and of all persons claiming to be creditors of the bankrupt. It, in effect, gives to parties all the opportunities of inquiry, and other facilities which they could have in an ordinary bankruptcy, but leaves the liquidation entirely in the hands of the creditors. It seems that the consent of the debtor is not indispensable to the adoption of this scheme, but it will be the duty of the Court, in considering the deed under sect. 187, to take care, if the bankruptcy is not to be annulled, that it gives the bankrupt the same protection from arrest until he passes his last examination, and means of applying for his order of discharge, as he would have if the bankruptcy proceeded.

A Treatise on the Law of Partnership, including its Application to Joint-stock and other Companies. By NATHANIEL LINDLEY, of the Middle Temple, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. In 2 vols. royal 8vo., pp. 1331.

THE English law of partnership has not been treated by text-writers with the care and attention which it deserves; and though the work before us is a very meritorious production, and is evidently the work of an able and industrious lawyer, it does not quite to our satisfaction fill the space which we have long noted as vacant in this department of legal literature. In one particular, however, it has an advantage for practical purposes over its predecessors, in being written with especial reference to the constitution and law of companies. There is, indeed, a book intitled "A Treatise on the Law of Joint-stock Companies," by Mr. Wordsworth, but we are not aware that any one has consulted it twice. Mr. Lindley says, "The present work is the result of an attempt to investigate the law of partnership, and to determine the extent to which its principles are applicable to companies. With this view the writer has first examined the principles which govern ordinary partnerships, and has then endeavoured to trace the manner in which these principles have been applied to the various kinds of companies known to the English law. This method is the key to the arrangement of the book, which is, in fact, a treatise not only on the law of partnership in its ordinary acceptation, but also on the law of companies, in so far as the last has any connexion with the first."

The main divisions of the subject are thus arranged:—

Book I. Of contracts of partnership, their creation and dissolution:—Chap. 1. The nature of the contract. 2. The consideration for the contract. 3. The persons capable of entering into the contract. 4. The evidence to prove the existence of a partnership. 5. The formation of companies and proof of membership. 6. Illegal partnerships and companies. 7. The general nature of a partnership—the mercantile and legal notions of a firm. 8. Duration and dissolution of the contract.

Book II. Of the rights and obligations of partnerships and companies as regards non-members:—Chap. 1. Liabilities of partnerships and companies for the acts of their agents. 2. Nature, extent, and duration of the liability of individual members of partnerships and companies to creditors. 3. Of actions and suits between partnerships and companies and non-members.

Book III. Of the rights and obligations of the members of partnerships and companies between themselves:—Chap. 1. Right to take part in the management. 2. Duty to observe good faith. 3. Capital of companies, and calls. 4. Joint and separate property. 5. Shares in partnerships and companies. 6. Contributions and indemnity. 7. Division of profits, and dividends. 8. Accounts. 9. Partnership articles and companies' deeds of settlement. 10. Actions and suits between partnerships and companies and their members, and between members.

Book IV. Dissolution and winding up of partnerships and companies:—Chap. 1. Death. 2. Bankruptcy. 3. Winding up of companies.

It will be seen that the arrangement is good, but in the filling up of the outline we frequently encounter obscurity in expression, and want of strict sequence in exposition. For instance, the following remarks on net and gross profits occur in the text, apropos of nothing, while the practical distinction between profits and gross returns is taken in a foot-note, where it may be easily overlooked:—

"By writers on political economy the word 'profit' is used to denote the difference between the value of advances, and the value of returns made by their employment. Profits are divided by these writers into gross and net—gross profits being the whole of the above difference, and net profits being so much of that difference as is attributable solely to the capital employed.

The remainder of the difference, or, in other words, the gross profits minus the net profits, has no particular name, but it represents the profits attributable to industry, skill, and enterprise."

This is at once obscure and inaccurate. The difference between the value of advances and the value of returns made by their employment cannot include the value of returns attributable, not to the advances, but to industry, skill, and enterprise. The distinction, where a distinction can be made, is between the profits of capital and the wages of management. But a treatise on the law of partnership is not the place for considering any such question, seeing that the English law distinguishes only between gross returns and profits, defining the latter as being the excess of gross returns above expenditure; and Mr. Lindley, after amusing himself by suggesting that losses may be regarded as profits with the negative sign prefixed, proceeds, steadily enough, in these words:—

"The actual or gross returns obtained by advances obviously include profits (in the sense of gain), if profits have been made. But these returns do not include losses, if losses are incurred. Hence persons who share gross returns share profits in the sense of gain, but they do not, by sharing the returns, share losses, for these fall entirely on those making the advances. Moreover, although a division of gross returns is a division of profits, if there are any, it is so only incidentally, and because such profits are included in what is divided; it is not a division of profits as such; and under an agreement for a division of gross returns, whatever is returned must be divided, whether there be profit or loss, or neither. These considerations have led to the distinction in English law between agreements to share profits and agreements to share gross returns; and to the doctrine, that whilst an agreement to share profits creates a partnership, an agreement to share gross returns does not."

In the next paragraph Mr. Lindley undertakes to correct an error, being himself in error:—

"Before, however, proceeding further, it is necessary to caution the reader against an ambiguity in the word 'partnership,' as used by English lawyers. Partnerships are by them divided into partnerships properly so called, and partnerships as regards third persons, which are not partnerships at all, and should never be so styled. What is called a partnership as regards third persons (quasi partnerships) is nothing more than a number of persons who, in consequence of certain acts done by them, are held liable for each other's conduct, as if they had entered into a contract of partnership among themselves." And subsequently he thus explains his notion of quasi partnerships:—"By the law of this country a person who is not a partner incurs liabilities as if he were one, in one or both of the following ways: by sharing profits—by holding himself out as a partner."

To shew that this classification is erroneous, it will be sufficient to cite the author's own description of a partnership at the commencement of his work:—"An agreement that something shall be attempted with a view to gain, and that the gain shall be shared by the parties to the agreement, is the grand characteristic of every partnership, and is the leading feature in every definition of the term." Parting or dividing profits is the essence of partnership, and wherever the right to do so exists, the parties having that right are partners. This is the inflexible rule of the English law; and when any of the incidents which the law annexes to such an agreement are removed by the agreement of the persons competent to dispense with them, an anomaly is introduced pro tanto, and the case ought to be regarded, not as a quasi partnership, but as a true partnership modified by agreement. It is not true that in such cases the persons who agree to share profits are partners only as regards third persons—they are partners as between themselves, for all purposes and with all consequences save those which are expressly excluded by the special terms of the contract; and any other view of their position is imperfect and erroneous.

In the chapter on the general nature of a partnership Mr. Lindley notices a distinction between the legal and mercantile notions of the status of a partnership; which, however, we think does not exist to the extent insisted on; for there can be no doubt that mercantile men have a tolerably accurate notion of the general principles of the law which affects their transactions, and do not, except for the convenience of accounts and bookkeeping, recognise as realities rights and liabilities which the law will not enforce. Nor is it true that "the firm, as such, has no legal recognition." The firm is recognised by law as the partnership, consisting, no doubt, of individuals, every one of whom must, in ordinary cases, be personally before the Court; but still the Courts regard the partnership as a collective entity, distinct from the several members; and for most purposes the mercantile notion of a firm is very nearly identical with the legal conception of a partnership.

In conclusion, although, as we have suggested, the work, as a scientific treatise, is not so strong and accurate as could be wished, it will be found to be a convenient and trustworthy guide in practice.

STARKIE'S LAW of EVIDENCE.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. In 1 vol. royal 8vo., 1853, price 11. 16s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinæ matius), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

STARKIE'S LAW of EVIDENCE.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. In 1 vol. royal 8vo., 1853, price 17. 16s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinæ malitudo), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course, could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 28, 1861.

COURTS of justice are established for the purpose of solving questions which actually and bonâ fide are brought before them for the purpose of obtaining a decision which will, whatever may be the result, unless reversed by the judgment of a higher tribunal, be binding upon the litigant parties. Courts of justice are not bound to decide, and will not decide, merely fictitious cases; they will not permit the tricks of the stage to be played on the judicial forum. However ardent might be the desire of two ingenious conveyancers to have a knotty point of real property law decided, no Courts would entertain the question if they were aware that the actors in the proceedings were merely imaginary, the facts fictitious, and that the whole suit was taken, not from real life, but was a mere scene, got up to gratify the impertinence of learned curiosity.

Moreover, although the facts of a case brought before the Court be true, the plaintiff must not appear in a fictitious character, for, when discovered, he will not be allowed to obtain that relief to which he might have been entitled had his character been real, and not assumed. To no class of suits, perhaps, do these remarks more forcibly apply than to those relating to public companies. In a proper case one shareholder is allowed to institute a suit on behalf of himself and the other shareholders of a company; but, ex necessitate, that constructive representation of one can only with propriety be allowed when the suit is intended to be bonâ fide for the benefit of those whom the plaintiff represents; otherwise nothing would be easier than for a person having a large stake in one company to obtain a small interest in another, and institute a suit ostensibly to obtain relief as a member of the latter company, when in reality it was intended merely to subvert the interests of its rival, and obtain for it indirectly, and under a false character, what such rival company could not obtain if it were to appear as plaintiff in its true colours. The mere fact that a person has a share in one company is not, of itself alone, enough to enable him to sustain a suit nominally on behalf of the other shareholders, when he in reality is acting for and on behalf of the interests of another company.

These principles have been clearly laid down and acted upon by the Lord Chancellor in the recent case of Forrest v. The Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 887). There it appeared that the plaintiff, a Mr. Forrest, suing on behalf of himself and the other shareholders, instituted a suit against the defendants, the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, to obtain an injunction against their employing certain steam-boats (which they were obliged to keep for the purposes of a ferry on the river Humber) in excursion trips down the river. The bill alleged not only that these excursions were ultra vires, but were also greatly prejudicial to a certain steam-packet company, called "The Gainsborough United Steam-packet Company, Limited," of which the plaintiff was a large shareholder. The defendants submitted that the suit was not for the benefit of the other shareholders of the company on whose behalf the plaintiff sued, but was instituted solely to promote and serve the interests of the steam-packet company, and that all the other shareholders of the defendants' company were opposed to the suit.

The motives which actuated the plaintiff in filing the bill, which to a certain extent are frankly stated in the bill, appear in rather an amusing and somewhat complex form in his cross-examination. In the first place, he admitted that his interest in the packet company was much greater than his interest in the railway company. He admitted that the excursion traffic had been continued for eight or ten years. One objection he had to the excursion traffic was, that the boats were running on Sundays, which he disapproved of from a moral and religious feeling. His principal objection, however, was to the injury done to the packet company, of which he was a director. The directors of the packet company had "directed" the institution of the suit, and indemnified him against the costs. Sir J. Romilly, M. R., dismissed the bill, with costs, upon the ground that what had been done was within the scope and powers of the defendants. Upon an appeal to the Lord Chancellor, his Lordship, but on entirely different grounds to those upon which the Master of the Rolls founded his judgment, refused the application, with costs. "I have nothing to do," said his Lordship, "with the motives of men suing in this court. If they come here in a bonâ fide character, the reason for their coming here is a matter beyond the province of a court of justice to inquire into. But if a man comes here representing to me that he is a bonâ fide shareholder in a company, and that it is the bonâ fide suit of that company, and it turns out not to be the suit of that company, but in reality to be in its origin, and in its very birth and creation, the suit of another company, then, I repeat, that is an illusory proceeding, and ought not to be attended to by the Court. The well-known words, the trite quotation, will occur to the minds of those who hear me—Fabula non est iudicium, in scenâ non in foro res agitur." If the plaintiff be permitted to assume, merely for the purpose of coming into this court, the garb of a shareholder, but at the same time explicitly announces—'This suit is not directed to the purposes of that company; I have nothing in common with the shareholders of that company; it has not emanated from the wish of the shareholders; it does not emanate from me as a shareholder; it is not my act; I am directed to do it by another party and another body of men'—then, in point of fact, the suit is not the expression of his own will, nor is it the legitimate prosecution of his own interests or his own objects, but it is the prosecution of the interests and objects of persons who have no right whatever to invoke the interference of this Court. It is most desirable that suits in this court should really be that which they profess to be, and whenever they are found to be illusory proceedings of the character I have described, I hold it the bounden duty of the Court to treat them as a mockery, and an imposition on the Court, and to deal with them accordingly." We entirely agree with the principles laid down by the Lord Chancellor in this important judgment, and we think that much good will result from their being carried out on all occasions to their fullest extent. Their application may not be devoid of difficulties in many instances, because, in cases of large companies, where directors, and perhaps a large and influential body of their supporters, are doing all in their power to divert the capital of the company from its legitimate purposes, and to employ it in speculations which were never intended upon its formation, it is but just that individual shareholders should have perfect freedom of action, and should have power, even though possessing shares in a rival company, to come into a court of equity, and ask for an injunction to restrain the directors from such misemployment of the capital of the company; but if they are really only agents of another company, then the mere possession of shares in the company against which they seek relief should not give them a right to it.

The case before the Lord Chancellor, both upon the pleadings and on the cross-examination, was a very clear one. The plaintiff's interest in the rival company, from his holding a larger stake in it than in the other, was evident. The suit was directed by the rival company, and the plaintiff was indemnified by them against costs, so that he could indulge in the luxury of litigation without dread of the usual and greatest drawback to its enjoyment. The principles laid down by the Lord Chancellor might, however, be well applied to cases where the facts against the plaintiff do not stand out in such bold relief.

Suppose, for instance, it appears that one company wishes to restrain another from carrying on a business which it considers to be prejudicial to its own interests, and, not being able to do so directly, does so indirectly, by instigating a shareholder to take proceedings for that purpose; ought such a suit, according to the principles laid down by the Lord Chancellor, to be successful? In the case of Colman v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company (10 Beav. 1) this objection was taken to the plaintiff, but it was not successful; and Lord Langdale, M. R., held that it was no ground of personal exception to a shareholder coming forward as a plaintiff in such a case, that "he had been instigated to institute his suit by another company." With regard to that case, the Lord Chancellor, without certainly expressing any approval of it, distinguishes it from the case before him, observing, that if the proposition of Lord Langdale were limited to the extent to which the words in which it is expressed go, there might be no exception to that proposition; but undoubtedly he would not assent to it if carried one jot beyond those limits.

From these observations of the Lord Chancellor we hope to see the principle he has laid down in Forrest v. The Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company acted upon in the decisions of the Court of Chancery, as far and as extensively as they possibly can be, consistently with the right which individual members of a company have to protect their own interests by bonâ fide proceedings; and that companies, whether they are actuated by religious or commercial motives, or both of them, will be warned that they cannot, by assuming the garb of a shareholder of a rival company, or by employing him as their tool, attain those ends which they could not do in their real character.

The principle might also, we think, be more extensively acted upon by the Legislature than it has been, and that every means should be taken to prevent suits in courts of justice being commenced, except for the interests of those on whose account they are nominally instituted. Administration suits, for instance, in the Court of Chancery, have not always been, and are not always now, instituted either for the benefit of creditors or the estate to be administered. But perhaps the most iniquitous law proceedings ever tolerated by courts of justice, or borne for a long period by a patient people, are those in which companies are wound up. Can no additional security be imposed against such proceedings being wantonly undertaken and recklessly carried on by the mere nominees of those who profit by them, ostensibly, indeed, for the payment of creditors, but in reality for the creation of costs, the apparent movers in the proceedings being the mere puppets of those undertaking the profitable process of winding up the affairs of shareholders unfortunate in the object of their speculation, but doubly unfortunate in falling into the hands of the winding-up fraternity.

A correct return of all the cases in which the operation of winding up companies has been performed, giving the names of the operators, the amount distributed, and the cost of distribution, with, perhaps, a few other details, would form a very instructive commentary upon the evils of allowing any person constructively to represent others, except in those cases where, to use the words of the Lord Chancellor, the suit is a bonâ fide one, faithfully, truthfully, and sincerely directed to the benefit and interest of the persons whom the party originating such proceedings claims a right to represent.

Reviews.

A Treatise on Facts, as Subjects of Inquiry by a Jury.
By JAMES RAM, of the Inner Temple, M.A. Cambridge, Barrister-at-Law. [Maxwell. 1861.]

WE are not sure whether the author of this treatise is the gentleman, of the same name, who published in 1832 a Treatise upon Assets, and in 1834 a work intitled "The Science of Legal Judgment." At all events, Mr. Ram does not claim their parentage in his title-page.

With respect to the work itself, we have no scruple in saying that it is an entertaining, and in some respects an instructive, perhaps we ought rather to say a "suggestive" one. We do not, indeed, think that Mr. Ram has grasped the wide and difficult subject which he has taken in hand in a philosophic and effective manner; but his work is full of quotations illustrative of his position, taken from all kinds of sources, including plays, romances, novels, &c. Many of these quotations are apt enough, others are not; some, again, come from apocryphal sources; others are rather too long; and the practice of quotation generally has been carried too far.

We proceed to give a few specimens of Mr. Ram's observations and quotations. First, then, there is the following comparison between "leading" and what Mr. Ram calls "open" questions (pp. 134, 135):—

"Assuming that the person questioned honestly desires to speak the truth, and that his memory is not defective, a strong probability is, that, whether the question be open or leading, he will return precisely the same answer to it.

"Each kind of question has, however, its advantages and disadvantages. If the witness be dishonest, and there be connivance between him and his interrogator—or supposing the former honest, and the latter not to be so—it is plain that a leading question may tend to bring out the answer which the interrogator desires. And assuming that both the witness and the interrogator are honest, both wishing the truth to be spoken, here, if the witness remembers little or nothing, or if he be dull or heedless, or be confused or embarrassed by timidity or any other cause, there is danger that, if he is addressed by a leading question, he may, without thought or consideration, echo in his reply the words put in the question, and so fail to speak the truth.

"An open question imposes on an honest witness the necessity of thought—a consideration of both the question and reply. It forces him to resort to, and, if need be, to ransack, his memory, and obliges him to utter only what he remembers. On the other hand, it is very possible, in many cases probable, that from sickness, old age, or other cause, his memory may be so infirm that he cannot be brought to a correct answer except by a leading question. All open questions, every question short of a leading one, may fail to quicken his memory, and bring him to express the fact of which he has knowledge. Nothing, for instance, is more common than to forget a person's name, and, without hearing it again, to be quite unable to call it to mind. We constantly hear people say, 'If I heard his name I should know it directly.' If the name be pronounced, the hearing of it refreshes the power of recollection, and the name is instantly remembered."

With reference to the employment of spies (pp. 175, 176):—

"Most persons will admit that a magistrate, in the exercise of his duty to watch over the public peace, may, with honour to himself, employ a spy upon the actions of conspirators against the State. Cicero told Catiline to his face, that at home and abroad, by day and night, he was beset by spies:—'Quamdiu quisquam erit, qui te defendere audeat, vives; et vives ita, ut nunc vivis, multis meis et firmis præsidii obsecus, ne commovere te contra rempublicam possis. Multorum te etiam oculi et aures non sentientem, sicut adhuc fecerunt, speculabuntur atque custodient. Etenim quid est, Catilina, quod jam amplius expectes, si neque nox tenebris obscurare cœtus nefarios, nec privata domus parietibus continere vocem conjurationis tuæ, potest? . . . Nihil agis, nihil moliris, nihil cogitas, quod ego non modo non audiam, sed etiam non videam planeque sentiam.' (Orat. in Catil. i, 2, 3). In such a case the welfare, perhaps safety, of the State justifies the magistrate, and with him his instrument, the spy; the unsullied honour of the former purifies the function of the latter.

"There is yet another kind of spy—the mercenary one, employed, not for public, but for private purposes—the man who will haunt society, treacherously insinuate himself into the confidence of others, listen at doors or thin partitions, or any way play the eaves-dropper, peep through key-holes, climb ladders to look in at windows.

"These men are much to be feared—

"'Scire volunt secreta domûs, atque inde timeri.'

"(Juvenal, iii, 113)."

On the demeanour of witnesses under examination (pp. 183, 184):—

"So a witness may be very honest, although his demeanour is in some respects open to censure, and deserves rebuke. Constitution of mind, habit, manner of life, may give him a coarse, blunt tongue, and a manner in appearance, yet not meant to be, uncivil or disrespectful. Such a rough, unrefined nature or carriage may well consist with a habit of speaking the truth, with an abhorrence of falsehood, and a wish and determination to give true evidence. A test and proof of his honesty may be, that neither in taking the oath nor giving his evidence does his manner imply any irreverence for the oath and its sacred duties.

"Demeanour consisting in confusion, embarrassment, hesitation in replying to questions, and even vacillating or contradictory answers, are not necessarily a proof of dishonesty in a witness, because this deportment may arise from bashfulness or timidity, and may be the natural and inevitable effect of an examination by a skilful, practised, perhaps unscrupulous advocate, whose aim in his questions is to entangle, entrap, and stupify the witness, and cause him to say and unsay anything or everything. It may not be good behaviour in a witness to suffer his eyes to wander about the court while he is under examination, but this conduct may not be unnatural, in the midst, perhaps, of an entirely new scene to him; and the distraction of mind occasioned by that employment of his eyes may well cause him, on returning to his duty, to answer hastily and without consideration. But in all this there may be no intentional disrespect to the court, and the witness notwithstanding may be a very honest one. Again, it happens to all persons occasionally, without thought, to use one word for another, making the sense very different from what was intended: unconsciously we say that we did not mean to say. In like manner a witness may inadvertently contradict himself. Demeanour, nevertheless, if it affords any fair ground to suspect the witness does not speak the truth, imposes the necessity of caution in putting faith in his evidence."

At the present time, when the utility and propriety of judicial oaths are so much discussed, the following quotation from Archbishop Secker, given by Mr. Ram (pp. 211, 212), will be found pertinent and interesting:—

"It must be owned great numbers will certainly speak truth without an oath, and too many will not speak it with one. But the generality of mankind are of a middle sort, neither so virtuous as to be safely trusted, in cases of importance, on their bare word, nor yet so abandoned as to violate a more solemn engagement. Accordingly we find by experience, that many will boldly say what they will by no means adventure to swear; and the difference which they make between these two things is often, indeed, much greater than they should; but still it shews the need of insisting on the strongest security. When once men are under that awful tie, and, as the Scripture phrase is, have bound their souls with a bond (Numb. xxx. 2), it composes their passions, counterbalances their prejudices and interests, makes them mindful of what they promise and careful what they assert, puts them upon exactness in every circumstance; and circumstances are often very material things. Even the good might be too negligent, and the bad would frequently have no concern at all about their words, if it were not for the solemnity of this religious act. And a farther advantage of it is, that when we have thus had the strongest assurance given us which we can have concerning any matter, we are naturally disposed to acquiesce in it; and an oath for confirmation becomes the end of all strife. (Heb. vi. 16)."

On the subject of cross-examination (pp. 216, 217):—"Archbishop Whately, in his Annotations on Lord Bacon's Essay on Judicature, expresses the following opinion on different modes of examining a witness:—"I think that the kind of skill by which a cross-examiner succeeds in alarming, misleading, or bewildering an honest witness, may be characterised as the most, or one of the most, base and depraved of all possible employments of intellectual power. Nor is it by any means the most effectual way of eliciting truth. The mode best adapted for attaining this object is, I am convinced, quite different from that by which an honest, simple-minded witness is most easily baffled and confused. I have seen the experiment tried of subjecting a witness to such a kind of cross-examination by a practical lawyer as would have been, I am convinced, the most likely to alarm and perplex many an honest witness, without any effect in shaking the testimony; and afterwards by a totally opposite mode of examination, such as would not have at all perplexed one who was honestly telling the truth, that same witness was drawn on, step by step, to acknowledge the utter falsity of the whole. Generally speaking, a quiet, gentle, and straightforward, though full and careful, examination will be the most adapted to elicit truth; and the manœuvres and the brow-beating, which are the most adapted to confuse an honest, simple-minded witness, are just what the dishonest one is the best prepared for. The more the storm blusters, the more carefully he wraps round him the cloak, which a warm sunshine will often induce him to throw off."

A good deal respecting the duty of advocates is to be found in the chapter "Of Advocacy" (p. 227). It has been stated, on high authority, that the advocate completely represents his client—that he should attend to nothing, know nothing, regard nothing but that interest—a proposition far too general in its terms, and which, if understood in a literal sense, conveys a most unjust and serious imputation on the profession of the law. Mr. Ram (p. 238) properly qualifies it thus:—

"The advocate represents his client; but he does not represent him in the sense, that for every purpose of attack and defence he stands entirely in his client's place. If he did, such representation would necessarily involve this consequence—that, supposing the client himself would attack or defend in an unscrupulous, dishonourable, or lying manner, the advocate must do so too. Such a consequence completely extinguishes the notion of entire representation of the client."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 5, 1861.

THE second great measure of legal reform originated by the Government in the late session of Parliament (the reform in the law of bankruptcy and insolvency must necessarily be looked on as the first) has been successful. The bills introduced by the Solicitor-General for the consolidation and amendment of a large portion of the statutable criminal law of England and Ireland have, with certain alterations, passed into law, by receiving the royal assent on the 6th August last, their provisions to come into operation on the 1st November next. We have frequently alluded to these bills during their progress through the Legislature (see supra, pp. 131, 143, 219, 236), and now propose to take a survey of the acts to which they have given rise.

The statutes are seven in number, as follows:—

24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, “An Act to consolidate and amend the Statute Law of England and Ireland relating to Accessories to and Abettors of indictable Offences.”

24 & 25 Vict. c. 95, “An Act to repeal certain Enactments which have been consolidated in several Acts of the present Session relating to indictable Offences and other Matters.”

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, “An Act to consolidate and amend the Statute Law of England and Ireland relating to Larceny and other similar Offences.”

24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, “An Act to consolidate and amend the Statute Law of England and Ireland relating to Malicious Injuries to Property.”

24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, “An Act to consolidate and amend the Statute Law of England and Ireland relating to indictable Offences by Forgery.”

24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, “An Act to consolidate and amend the Statute Law of the United Kingdom against Offences relating to the Coin.”

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, “An Act to consolidate and amend the Statute Law of England and Ireland relating to Offences against the Person.”

After the bills in question were introduced into Parliament, the principle of division on which they are founded was severely attacked by Mr. Coode in a pamphlet intitled “A Letter to Lord Palmerston on his Bills for the Disintegration of the Statute Law,” which will be found noticed supra, p. 236. In justification of the course adopted by the Government, it may, perhaps, be urged that legislating in the manner here adopted is not new—a precedent having been made for it by Sir Robert Peel, in the statutes passed in the 7 & 8 Geo. 4 and 9 Geo. 4, known by the title of “Peel's Acts;” so that, even supposing Mr. Coode's objections well founded, it is now too late to discuss the question. Indeed, the difficulty is one sure to present itself in limine whenever any scheme either of codification or of consolidation on a large scale is brought before the Legislature. It might further be urged that Mr. Coode ought to have brought forward his objections at an earlier period.

In order to attain a clear view of the effect of these statutes, we must observe that it would be a great mistake to look on them as constituting either a code or portions of a code—things which they neither are nor profess to be. Neither are they, nor do they even profess to be, a complete consolidation of statute law. They are merely what their titles denote—namely, five of them are acts consolidating and amending the law on five particular subjects; another consolidates and amends the statute law relative to accessories to and abettors of indictable offences; and the other repeals certain enactments which it was necessary to repeal in order to make room for the new legislation.

The first subject that must strike the mind of every person on perusing these statutes is one which we have recently considered when examining the bills on which they are founded—namely, the number of offences hitherto punishable with death from which that punishment is taken away by them. The serious offences of administering poison with intent to murder (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 11); wounding with like intent (Id.); setting fire to a dwelling-house with a person in it (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 2); exhibiting a false light with intent to bring a ship into danger (Id., s. 47); robbery accompanied by wounding (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 43); and unnatural offences (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 61), are among them. The question has been much discussed whether the first two of these ought to be punished capitally or not. Their heinousness is urged in favour of the former view, while, in favour of the latter, it is argued that it is wise to leave criminals a locus poenitentiae. A man has already committed a barbarous assault on another; if he knows that his life will be forfeited, he has the temptation placed before him to persevere, and go on to actual murder, in order to prevent the injured party appearing to bear testimony against him; whereas, when the capital punishment is restricted to the case where life has been actually sacrificed, the criminal is supplied with the strongest possible motive to stop short of the greater offence. Be this as it may, it is worthy of observation, that since the above acts received the royal assent (as already stated, they do not come into operation till the 1st November next) a man was hanged for wounding with intent to murder a woman with whom he cohabited; and although the matter was brought under the notice of the executive, they refused to interfere. The case, indeed, was as bad as bad could be; but whether the allowing the sentence to be executed proceeded from tacit disapproval of the change in the law effected by these enactments, or from the higher principle, that the law, while it exists, ought to be enforced, it is needless to inquire. And we may as well mention here the distinction taken in the Code Napoléon, liv. Cod. Pénal, art. 1, § 2, between the cases where the death of the injured party is averted by some act independent of the will and intention of the accused, and where it is averted by leniency on his part.

It has been for a long time highly fashionable to assail the criminal law of England as the very impregnation of severity and absurdity; but we deny that either of these terms is applicable to that portion of it which was derived from the common law. Never was charge worse founded than that which accuses the common law of being sanguinary. How many offences were capital by it? Twelve or fourteen*; and these were, for the most part at least, of a nature highly dangerous to society. About the sixteenth century a different principle of criminal legislation sprang up; it grew into an axiom, that, whenever any offence became frequent or troublesome, the only remedy was to make it felony, without benefit of clergy; and this course was persevered in until at the beginning of the present century the list of capital offences disclosed the fearful number of nearly 200. The obvious inhumanity of this state of the law induced judges to invent absurdities, and juries to find impossibilities, in order to evade it; and these, joined to the constant habit of remitting capital punishment by the executive, reduced our criminal practice to a system, the general characteristics of which were severity and uncertainty. More recent legislation put an end to this immense evil, and the number of capital offences was reduced to nearly the same as at the common law. And whatever might have been said previous to the statutes before us, the charge against our criminal code, of being sanguinary or Draconian, must now be for ever abandoned. These acts retain the punishment of death for murder alone. It of course remains for treason; and we apprehend that the 12 Geo. 3, c. 24, s. 1, which renders it a capital felony to set fire to or destroy ships of war, arsenals, dock-yards, &c., is still unrepealed; at least, we do not find it noticed in the repealing statute, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 95. Possibly there may still be some other capital felonies, but their number must necessarily be very few. To all this it must be added, that the offence of treason has been very much limited of late years—many acts which formerly were either construed by the judges to be treason under the 25 Edw. 3, or were made treason by substantive legislation, having been reduced to felony, and the capital punishment taken away. Indeed, by one of the acts before us, the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 1, the forging the great or privy seal, privy signet, or sign-manual, which were previously treason, although, by a strange anomaly in the law, not punishable capitally, are reduced to felony.

Having in some of our recent articles, already referred to, considered the question of the punishment of death, we are unwilling to recur to it at present. Still we feel it right to remark, that while a tolerably large and very energetic portion of the community are pressing the Legislature to abolish capital punishment, a considerable pressure is also brought to bear against every secondary punishment which it is proposed to substitute for it. Thus there is in the public mind a disinclination (perhaps we might say prejudice) against protracted periods of solitary confinement—a feeling which is so strong that the Legislature has limited the duration of that punishment to one month at a time. Transportation has been nearly abolished, for various reasons, some social, some juridical, some political. See, however, the observations on this subject by Byles, J., in his recent charge to the grand jury of Dorsetshire (supra, p. 297). And with respect to penal servitude, which has been substituted for it, and at the present moment is the favourite "peine afflictive et infamante" of our legislators, a system of criminal discipline has been established which goes far to neutralise the action of the law. For instance, under one of the statutes before us, the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 11, the crime of administering poison with intent to murder is punishable with penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement. But by a system of convict regulation every person sentenced to penal servitude for life can claim his liberation as matter of right at the end of fifteen years, provided his conduct has been good during that time; and persons condemned to penal servitude for a less period than for life can likewise claim their liberation after a shorter period of good conduct. A strong illustration of the working of this system occurred lately. Inquiry was made of the Government, in the House of Commons, as to the reason why a certain criminal, sentenced to penal servitude for life for a very bad offence, had been discharged; to which the Government replied that they had no choice in the matter, the man having conducted himself well during the prescribed time; and the Home Secretary is reported to have said on a recent occasion, that imprisonment for life was objectionable, as it made men desperate. The codes of Louisiana and other countries, where the punishment of death has been abolished for murder, punish the person guilty of that offence by imprisonment for life, in a way that renders it questionable whether the sparing his life is a favour to him or not. The law of Russia, in particular, punishes it with twenty years' penal servitude in the mines of Siberia—a country, the climate of which is so severe, that, by the Russian law, the being exiled to live in it, apart from any further coercion whatever, is deemed sufficient punishment for some minor offences.

Reviews.

A Treatise on the Law of Merchant Shipping. By DAVID MACLACHLAN, M.A., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

[Maxwell; Hodges, Smith, & Co., Dublin; Bell & Bradfute, Edinburgh. 1860.]

A Compendium of the Law of Merchant Shipping; with an Appendix, containing all the Statutes and Forms of Practical Utility. By FREDERICK PHILIP MAUDE and CHARLES EDWARD POLLOCK, Esqrs., of the Inner Temple, Barristers-at-Law. Second Edition. [H. Sweet. 1861.]

THESE works are valuable contributions to our legal literature. In a maritime nation like ours the law of merchant shipping is necessarily an important and interesting subject at any time; but the great changes recently effected in it by the Merchant Shipping Act, and kindred acts, render it at the present moment one of paramount importance. The designs and plans of the works before us, however, differ considerably, and are thus stated in their respective Prefaces.

Mr. MacLachlan's account of his work is as follows:—

"The following treatise, planned upon the order of the subject, opens with the acquisition of ship property, and those dealings with it, when acquired, which are recognised and sanctioned by law. It passes from this to the various relations of the owners in connexion with such property—among themselves, with their agents, to the world at large, the mariners in particular, and generally to the owners of other ships that may be met with on the maritime highway. Thus far it comprises only those dealings and relations, legally considered, which begin and end immediately in the possession of this description of property, forming what may be regarded as the first grand division of the subject. The second division is concerned with the commercial purpose of ship property, and all those obligations which are severally contracted by the owner and the freighter in the employment of it for that end, whether expressly stipulated between them at the first, or implied by law, from the relation thus formed, in connexion with the course of subsequent events. The subject, in this view of it, appears distinctively marked about a few centres, presenting for the investigation of it a plan that easily admits of the full discussion of particulars, whilst it naturally combines towards the general development of the whole, and is immediately accessible, in any part of it, to a mere stranger.

"This treatise was originally intended, upon the suggestion of a friend, to have been founded on the fourth edition of Abbott on Shipping, the last of that work for which its eminent author held himself responsible. Under this impression the announcement of it by my publisher appeared; and I availed myself of assistance from that edition to the extent of fifty pages and notes, greatly altered, and distributed in various parts of this volume. But at an early stage of my progress I entirely abandoned that intention, believing that I could treat the subject more satisfactorily upon a plan altogether my own, than by endeavouring to recast Abbott's work with a different arrangement. To do this, indeed, would have destroyed the identity of that treatise without compensating any one by the value of the result. For the present work, therefore, I am entirely responsible."

The work of Messrs. Maude and Pollock is the second edition of a treatise published by the same authors in 1853, which the recent alterations in the law on the subject of merchant shipping have now rendered almost useless. In the Preface to the present edition the authors say—

"Since the publication of the first edition of this work, in 1853, the statute law affecting merchant shipping has undergone many and important changes. Almost all the statutes then in force relating to this subject have been repealed, and acts consolidating and altering the law have been passed, including the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), the Passengers Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 119), and other statutes of less importance. These changes have rendered it necessary to recast the whole of this work, and to rewrite almost the whole of it. In embodying in the present edition the provisions of the recent statutes, and the decisions which have occurred since the first edition was published, the authors have adhered as closely as possible to the original plan of the book, and they have retained such references to the earlier statutes as they have deemed necessary to a clear understanding of the law as it now exists.

"The index and table of cases have been compiled by Mr. C. Warner Lewis, of the Northern Circuit, to whom the authors are also indebted for very material assistance in preparing the text."

From this it appears that, in order fully to understand the plan of the work, we must refer to the former edition, in the Preface to which we are informed—

"The object of the writers of this book has been to provide a compendium of the law relating to merchant shipping in as small a compass as is consistent with the importance and extent of the subject. The plan adopted has been to confine the text of the work to the law of England as it now exists, whether it depend upon statutory enactment or upon the decisions of the Courts of this country; reserving for the notes such remarks upon our own earlier law, and such notices of the laws of foreign countries, as have appeared directly to explain the principles of the existing law."

Hence it appears that the work in question is not offered to the Profession as a systematic treatise on the Law of Merchant Shipping, like Abbott on Shipping, and works of that character. Its very title is, "A Compendium of the Law of Merchant Shipping;" and indeed a further examination of it confirms the conclusion. The text amounts only to 474 pages, a part of which is covered by extracts from various statutes; and then follows an Appendix of 261 pages, consisting of statutes, forms, &c. Mr. MacLachlan's work, on the contrary, professes to be a formal treatise on the subject, and is neither a compendium of it nor a commentary on certain important statutes. His work is not, however, very long—it consists of 609 pages of text, and 178 pages of statutes, forms, &c.

Both works are well executed, and, as we have already stated, are valuable contributions to our legal literature, and we are therefore most unwilling to institute invidious comparisons between them. Mr. Mac-lachlan's work we have examined with much pleasure; he is an author who possesses the qualification so rare in our day of thinking for himself, and putting forward his views with distinctness and firmness—views for the most part based on common sense, or supported by authority. And although the work displays much learning and research, and goes deeply into the subjects on which it treats, its systematic, and in many places elementary, character, renders it well adapted for a class book. His style is also terse and nervous. As a specimen take the following. In the chapter on Mariners (pp. 177 et seq.) we have the following respecting the master:—

"We have already considered the authority conferred on the master, as the agent of the owners, in his dealings with strangers. In his command on board, a totally different description of duties and qualifications is required of him. Some of these are peculiar. The office itself is singular, for the wide variety of functions and duty which it combines. The responsibility of his position; the careful providence of his administration; the tact and temper of one who daily lives among those whom he is to govern and conciliate, including, when passengers are on board, individuals probably of every grade; the skill and seamanship and divining sagacity of the navigator; the vigilance of one who must rely on wind and sea with unceasing distrust, and still hold human life and material wealth in his keeping; and the courage, self-possession, and prompt decision of the mind that rules alone through storm and sunshine—such are the accumulated requisites of this one office.

"It is a little remarkable, however, unless it be traceable to the familiarity of our people with the sea, as contrasted, for instance, with the French nation<sup>o</sup>, that in the greatest maritime country the world has yet seen, the public had no security, till a few years ago†, for the qualification of those to whom they freely committed their property and their life. Provision is now made by the Merchant Shipping Act‡ for giving certificates of fitness to those who are found, by testimonials and personal examination, to be qualified by previous good conduct, and by ability, skill, and knowledge, to undertake such a command. The possession of such a certificate by any one going to sea from this country in the capacity of master or mate is compulsory; and the use of fraudulent means for the purpose of dishonestly supplying the want is declared to be a crime§.

The treatise of Messrs. Maude and Pollock is less systematic, but is well adapted for practice. Like the other work, a good deal of learning and research are here displayed, although never unnecessarily. It is matter of taste and opinion; but we confess we do not admire the plan of keeping foreign and ancient law so much in the notes; and, indeed, the note system generally is too much resorted to throughout the work. The important subject of "particular average," for instance, we find explained in a note at p. 278. Surely this ought to have formed part of the text.

* "The first article, under the title 'Du Capitaine,' in the second book of the Marine Ordinance of Louis XIV in 1681, requires experience and a public examination on the part of every candidate for this office. (See Cleirac on the first article of the laws of Oléron; French Ordinance, liv. 2, tit. 1; 'Du Capitaine,' and Valin thereon; Hans. Ord. of 1614, tit. 3, art. 1; 2 Pardessus. 592).

We shall conclude with a specimen of the style of this work:—

"The continental codes of maritime law differ in the principles by which they regulate compensation in cases of collision. The rules acted upon by the English Court of Admiralty on this head are as follows:—First, if the damage happen without blame being imputable to either party—as where the loss is occasioned by a storm or any other vis major—the loss must be borne by the party on whom it happens to light; the other is not responsible to him in any degree. Secondly, if both parties are to blame—as where there has been a want of due diligence or of skill on both sides—the loss must be apportioned between the parties, as it has been occasioned by the fault of both. Thirdly, if the damage happen by the misconduct of the suffering party only, the sufferer must bear his own burthen. And, lastly, if it was caused by the fault of the ship which ran the other down, the injured party is entitled to an entire compensation from the other<sup>o</sup>. The first of these rules—namely, that where the damage is the result of mere accident the loss must be borne by the party on whom it falls—has been often recognised and acted upon†. It appears that it will be applied, not only where the evidence shews conclusively that the injury was occasioned by accident, but also where there is a reasonable doubt as to the preponderance of the evidence on this point‡. An inevitable accident has been defined to be one which could not possibly be prevented by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, or maritime skill§. Under the second of these rules, when both vessels are in fault, the sums representing the damage sustained by each are added together, and the amount is equally divided between the two. This rule holds good even although one of the vessels may have been more in fault than the other|. Where the Court of Session in Scotland, finding that both ships were to blame, but

† "The Shannon (1 W. Rob. 463); The Ebenezer (2 W. Rob. 206); The Itinerant (Id. 236); The Thornley (7 Jur. 659). This rule agrees with that of the Roman law (Dig. lib. 9, tit. 2, 'Ad Legem Aquileiam,' fr. 29), the principle of which was adopted by some of the early maritime codes of Europe. (See the Consolato, cap. 155). The laws of Oléron and of Wisbuy appear to lay down a different rule, and to direct that in cases of accident the damage shall be divided equally between the injured vessels. (See art. 15 of the former law, and arts. 29, 49, 50, and 65 of the latter). It is curious that Boulay Paty, in his Cours de Droit Commercial Maritime, tit. 12, s. 6, vol. 4, p. 498, asserts that the former of these rules was adopted by all the ancient maritime codes. The French Code de Commerce follows the civil law, and by art. 407 directs—'Si l'événement a été purement fortuit, le dommage est supporté sans répétition par celui des navires qui l'a éprouvé.' (See also the observations on this subject in Valin's Ordon. de la Marine, liv. 3, tit. 7, art. 10, vol. 2, p. 177; Emerigon's Traité des Assur., c. 12, s. 14; 1 Bell's Com. 580, 581, and notes; Marshall's Ins., b. 1, c. 12, s. 2; and 3 Kent's Com. 231).

Lord Denman in De Vaux v. Salvador (4 Ad. & El. 432), speaking of this rule, said, 'It grows out of an arbitrary provision in the law of nations from views of general expediency, not as dictated by natural justice, nor (possibly) quite consistent with it.' (See also the quotations from foreign law writers, and the valuable remarks in Mr. Serjeant Shee's edition of Abb. Ship. 623, 10th ed.)

that a greater share of blame rested on one, decided that her owners were liable to two-thirds of the damage, the House of Lords, upon appeal, reversed the decision<sup>o</sup>. This rule is now, however, subject to the provision of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, which has been already noticed†, and which provides that the owners of ships, by which the statutory rules as to sailing lights or fog signals are infringed, are entitled to no recompense whatever for any damage sustained in a collision occasioned by this disobedience, unless the circumstances of the case made a departure from the rules necessary‡. The third rule mentioned above requires no comment§. With respect to the last, when the facts upon which its application depends have been determined, the Court of Admiralty, in awarding compensation to the party injured, proceeds on the same principles as a court of common law."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 12, 1861.

WE return to the subject of the statutes passed in the recent session of Parliament for the consolidation and amendment of the criminal law.

The statutes before us were not merely passed through Parliament in the regular way; but in the House of Commons the bills on which they are founded were referred to a select committee of thirty-one members, consisting of most of the eminent lawyers in the House, whether of the English or Irish Bar, six of whom, however, did not take their seats upon it. In this committee, and afterwards in the House itself, considerable differences of opinion prevailed on particular clauses, and among others the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 4, relative to the offence of conspiring or soliciting to murder. By the common law this offence was a misdemeanour, but in Ireland had been erected into a felony by a statute affecting that country; and in the bill on which the statute before us is founded it was proposed to make the offence felony in England also. This was afterwards altered, and the offence constituted a misdemeanour, in terms to which we shall presently refer.

In the course of the debate one honourable member, who was at first opposed to this alteration, remarked, that after all the difference was not material, seeing that, although called a misdemeanour, the punishment of ten years' penal servitude might be inflicted for it—a punishment equal to that of many felonies, and exceeding that of many others. To a certain extent this observation was a just one; but the act in this respect only presents another instance of a practice which has been very prevalent in the legislation of modern times, namely, the confounding together the offences of felony and misdemeanour, which in our ancient law were kept so distinct. Nothing, as appears to us, can be more correct than both the views and nomenclature of our common law on this subject. The singularly accurate expression "misdemeanour" simply implies that a man has misconducted himself, and justice will inflict punishment if appealed to; while the expression "felony" is applied to a very limited class of offences, the condemnation for which carries forfeiture, not merely of lands or goods, but of social position, and perhaps even of existence. Against these latter the common law declared a war of extermination. It is said to such culprits, "We and you cannot exist in the same state of society, and we will root you out of it." Following up this view, a felony could not be compounded; those who sheltered the criminal were punishable; those who knew of a felony were bound to disclose it; and all rights of action and all misdemeanours became merged in it. That the line between felony and misdemeanour was in all cases correctly drawn we do not affirm; but one great employment of the legislators of more recent times seems to have been to break down all demarcation between them. The tendency of this is to destroy in the minds of the population the old instinctive horror of felony which existed among our ancestors; and the best comment on it is the number, the wickedness, and the audacity of our criminals. And nothing can be more erroneous than to look on this as a technicality peculiar to the common law of England, or a relic of barbarism which it is part of the mission of modern civilisation to extinguish. On the contrary, this division typifies a distinction existing in the nature of things—one to which the common sense of mankind has generally subscribed, and which is to be found in the laws of most countries, not excepting those two famed instances of modern legislation, the Code Napoléon* and the Criminal Code of Louisiana†, viz. that some offences are of a heinous character, and threaten the existence of society, while others are of a more venial nature.

Our readers doubtless remember the celebrated case of Dr. Bernard, who was tried at the Central Criminal Court in the spring of 1858 as the accomplice of Orsini and others in their attempt on the life of the Emperor of the French. The acquittal of the accused on the facts rendered unnecessary a judicial decision on the point of law presented by the case—a point which occasioned much doubt at the time, and which will be found discussed by Mr. Fitzjames Stephen in the papers of the Juridical Society, vol. 2, p. 67. Dr. Bernard was indicted under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 46, s. 1, and the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 7. The former of these enacts, that “if any person shall become an accessory before the fact to any felony, whether the same be a felony at common law or by virtue of any statute made or to be made, such person may be indicted, tried, convicted, and punished in all respects as if he were a principal felon.” And the latter, “If any of his Majesty’s subjects shall be charged in England with any murder or manslaughter, or with being accessory before the fact to any murder, or after the fact to any murder or manslaughter, the same being respectively committed on land out of the United Kingdom, whether within the king’s dominions or without, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace of the county or place where the person so charged shall be, to take cognisance of the offence so charged, and to proceed therein as if the same had been committed within the limits of his ordinary jurisdiction; and if any person so charged shall be committed for trial, or admitted to bail to answer such charge, a commission of oyer and terminer under the Great Seal shall be directed to such persons, and into such county or place, as shall be appointed by the Lord Chancellor, &c., for the speedy trial of any such offender; and such persons shall have full power to inquire of, hear, and determine all such offences within the county or place limited in their commission, by such good and lawful men of the said county or place as shall be returned before them for that purpose, in the same manner as if the offences had been actually committed in the said county or place,” &c.: “provided also, that nothing herein contained shall prevent any person from being tried in any place out of this kingdom for any murder or manslaughter committed out of this kingdom, in the same manner as such person might have been tried before the passing of this act.”

The doubt that arose was, whether these acts applied to the case of an alien in this country being accessory before the fact to murder committed abroad by another alien on a third. Both the above statutes are repealed by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 95. By the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 46, s. 1, is re-enacted; while the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, is replaced by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 4, already mentioned, which seems worded with the view of avoiding this difficulty, and is as follows:—“All persons who shall conspire, confederate, and agree to murder any person, whether he be a subject of her Majesty or not, and whether he be within the Queen’s dominions or not, and whosoever shall solicit, encourage, persuade, or endeavour to persuade, or shall propose to any person to murder any other person, whether he be a subject of her Majesty or not, and whether he be within the Queen’s dominions or not, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not more than ten and not less than three years; or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.” But neither the repealed acts nor the consolidation acts touch an important question suggested by Dr. Bernard’s case, viz. whether a conspiracy in this country by foreigners or others to overturn the government of a foreign country with which this country is on terms of amity is cognisable by our jurisprudence. We, however, make no doubt that such conduct, being, as it is, a violation of the law of nations, and manifestly calculated to embroil and lead us into war with other States, is punishable as a high misdemeanour by the common law. (See, on this subject, 4 Jur., N. S., part 2, p. 199).

Three of these statutes (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 119; c. 97, s. 75; c. 100, s. 70) contain the following excellent provision:—“Whenever whipping may be awarded for any indictable offence under this act, the court may sentence the offender to be once privately whipped, and the number of strokes and the instrument with which they shall be inflicted shall be specified by the court in the sentence.” It certainly was a monstrous abuse in our law that the effect and severity of this punishment depended entirely on the caprice of a jailor, or at best on some system of prison discipline, of which the law and the courts took no cognisance. But just see the anomalous position in which the whole subject stands now. Not one of the acts before us makes any general provision on the subject; their provision respecting it only relates to “indictable offences under this act.” Now, there are other acts by which the punishment of whipping is allowed—e. g. the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51, s. 2, for attempts to alarm or injure the Queen; to such, of course, the recent legislation does not apply, and the pre-existing law remains in all its mischievous absurdity.

The stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, “to consolidate and amend the statute law relating to accessories and abettors of indictable offences,” is worth attention. In treason there are no accessories, all persons involved in that high offence being looked on by the law as principals. By the common law, also, the doctrine of accessories does not apply to misdemeanours; and this statute enacts (sect. 8), “Whosoever shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any misdemeanour, whether the same be a misdemeanour at common law or by virtue of any act passed or to be passed, shall be liable to be tried, indicted, and punished as a principal offender.” It is only, therefore, in the intermediate class of offences—“felonies”—that the doctrine of principal and accessory applies. By the common law, an accessory could not without his own consent, unless tried with the principal, be brought to trial until the guilt of the principal had been legally ascertained. (Arch. Cr. Pl. 8, 12th ed.) The obvious and great inconveniences of this caused several statutes to be passed, extending the law and jurisdiction of the courts with respect to accessories; viz. the 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, ss. 9, 11; the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 46, ss. 1, 2; and the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 15. These are all repealed by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, and re-enacted by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, as follows:—

* Code Pénal, Dispositions Préliminaires, &c.

† Crim. Code of Louisiana, book 2, tit. 1, c. 1.

Sect. 1 (re-enacting the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 46, s. 1). "Whoever shall become an accessory before the fact to any felony, whether the same be a felony at common law or by virtue of any act passed or to be passed, may be indicted, tried, convicted, and punished in all respects as if he were a principal felon."

Sect. 2 (re-enacting the 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 9). "Whoever shall counsel, procure, or command any other person to commit any felony, whether the same be a felony at common law or by virtue of any act passed or to be passed, shall be guilty of felony, and may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory before the fact to the principal felony, together with the principal felon, or after the conviction of the principal felon, or may be indicted and convicted of a substantive felony, whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice, and may thereupon be punished in the same manner as any accessory before the fact to the same felony, if convicted as an accessory, may be punished."

Sect. 3 enacts, "Whoever shall become an accessory after the fact to any felony, whether the same be a felony at common law or by virtue of any act passed or to be passed, may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory after the fact to the principal felony, together with the principal felon, or after the conviction of the principal felon, or may be indicted and convicted of a substantive felony, whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice, and may thereupon be punished in like manner as any accessory after the fact to the same felony, if convicted as an accessory, may be punished." This is a re-enactment of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 46, s. 2, with the omission of this provision at the end of that statute:—"Provided always, that no person who shall be once duly tried for any such offence, whether as an accessory after the fact or as for a substantive felony, shall be liable to be again indicted or tried for the same offence."

Sect. 5 (re-enacting the 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 11) enacts, "If any principal offender shall be in anywise convicted of any felony, it shall be lawful to proceed against any accessory, either before or after the fact, in the same manner as if such principal felon had been attainted thereof, notwithstanding such principal felon shall die, or be pardoned, or otherwise delivered before attainer; and every such accessory shall, upon conviction, suffer the same punishment as he would have suffered if the principal had been attainted."

Sect. 6 (re-enacting the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 15). "Any number of accessories at different times to any felony, and any number of receivers at different times of property stolen at one time, may be charged with substantive felonies in the same indictment, and may be tried together, notwithstanding the principal felon shall not be included in the same indictment, or shall not be in custody or amenable to justice."

On looking generally at the repealing statute, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, we shall find that by it between thirty and forty acts are totally, and about seventy partially, repealed, and their provisions more or less re-enacted. Among the former are the acts known by the name of "Peel's Acts"—the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, cc. 29, 30, and 9

Geo. 4, c. 31, &c.; together with the corresponding statutes relating to Ireland—the 9 Geo. 4, cc. 55, 56, and 10 Geo. 4, c. 34, &c.; the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 76, to prevent the defilement of young women, commonly known by the title of "the Bishop of Oxford's Act"; the Fraudulent Trustees Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54, &c.

There are some defects in former statutes which ought to have been remedied in these consolidation acts. The stat. 25 Hen. 8, c. 6 (revived by the 5 Eliz. c. 17), to provide for the punishment of unnatural offences, describes sodomy as an offence committed by man with mankind or with beast; on the construction of which it was held that unnatural connexion with an animal of the "fowl" kind was not within the statute, a "fowl" not coming under the term "beast." (Rea v. Mulready, 1 Russ. Cr. 568). In order to remedy this, the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, repealed the two former acts, and, in sect. 15, extended the definition to the offence committed "with mankind or with any animal." By an act passed the year before, the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, ss. 8, 9, and with the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, forming part of the code known by the name of "Peel's Acts," severe punishment was denounced against the endeavouring to extort money, &c. by threatening to accuse any person with an "infamous crime;" and the statute then proceeded to define what was such a crime, declaring it to be "the abominable crime, &c. committed with mankind or with beast." According to this it would seem that the imputing to a person the commission of this abominable crime with any of the fowl species is not imputing to him the commission of an infamous crime, within the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, ss. 8, 9. Be this as it may, the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 61, re-enacts, in its terms, the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 15; and the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 46, re-enacts, in its terms, the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, ss. 8, 9.

Various other objections of detail might be taken to these statutes, which will, no doubt, in due time, come before the courts, and on discovery we trust rectified by the Legislature. Still, upon the whole, these statutes are a step in the right direction, and will, especially when taken in conjunction with another statute of the late session, the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 101, "for promoting the revision of the statute law, by repealing divers acts and parts of acts which have ceased to be in force," go far to reduce our statute-book to a reasonable size, and weed it of much tautology, contradiction, and absurdity. As the Legislature, whether wisely or not, seems to have rejected the principle of codification, and adopted that of consolidation and amendment, let us hope that the good work will not be lost sight of, but persevered in—slowly, it may be, but surely—until it is thoroughly accomplished; and that our rulers will not fall into the mischievous error of believing, that because the first steps in a salutary reform have been taken, the work is entirely done, and all consideration or thought about it may be abandoned for the future.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.

IN the month of January of the present year an able paper was read before the Juridical Society (published in its transactions, vol. 2, p. 440) by Nathaniel Lindley, Esq., barrister-at-law, intitled "On some Errors in Legislation, illustrated by the Statutes relating to Joint-stock Companies." Mr. Lindley, as the author of the recent valuable treatise on the law of partnership, is specially qualified to deal with a subject of this nature; but his paper is too long for insertion, and we shall accordingly shew its character by citing a few of the leading passages:—

"A long study of the law relating to companies has convinced me that its unsatisfactory state, both past and present, is, to a great extent, attributable to a disregard by the Legislature of a few important principles established by writers on jurisprudence and legislation; and it will be my endeavour, in the present paper, to point out the errors which I conceive have been committed. I am induced to enter upon a criticism of the enactments relating to companies by the reflection, that those enactments have, on the whole, failed to establish the law upon a satisfactory basis, and to bring it into a satisfactory state; and by the further reflection, that nothing is more calculated to lead to future improvement than a careful and dispassionate examination of causes of past failures.

"Parliament has dealt with companies in two ways: it has done its best to suppress them altogether, and, finding that impossible, it has endeavoured to regulate them. In both cases the Legislature has acted with a view to the public weal, and in both cases it has committed grievous errors.

"I pass now from the errors committed in legislating against companies to the errors committed in legislating for them.

"Here two great mistakes have been made. First, there has been no unity of plan; and, secondly, there has been a great deal too much enacted. In addition to these, there are other minor faults discoverable in the statutes relating to companies; and, in particular, there is in most of them a deplorable want of clear and precise expression; but this fault, although practically of the greatest consequence, is one on which I do not propose to enlarge.

"With respect to absence of unity in plan. In legislating for companies, Parliament never seems to have considered what was required to make the law suitable to the wants of the public; and yet a little attention paid to this point would have done more than anything else to render legislation successful and easy.

"The want of plan and method which pervades the various statutes relating to companies is not only observable in their several general schemes, but also, and to a still greater degree, in their most important details. If any one is disposed to doubt this, let him try and answer the question—how is a judgment against a company to be enforced? He will find it impossible to give any answer which will be true of more than one particular kind of company. He will have to distinguish one company from another, and to give as many different answers as there are sorts of companies; and yet it is obvious that there is no necessity for all this. There ought to be some one method applicable to all companies without distinction, and by which their members might be compelled to fulfil their engagements.

"But it may be said the laws have been already consolidated, and the want of unity and simplicity complained of has recently been supplied. It is greatly to be wished that this were true; but, in fact, no attempt has yet been made to do more than consolidate, first, the laws relating to those companies which, like railway companies, cannot be carried on without interfering with private property; and, secondly, the laws relating to registered joint-stock companies. But there are numbers of companies to which the laws thus consolidated have no application. There are cost-book mining companies; there are banking companies still governed by the 7 Geo. 4, c. 46; there are chartered companies; there are companies governed by the Letters-patent Act, 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 73; and there are numerous insurance and other companies governed by special acts of their own. No attempt has been made to deal with these; and even the bill brought into Parliament last session, for the purpose of consolidating the laws relating to companies, only dealt with registered companies. What has been wanted from the first, and what is wanted now, is some enactment which shall apply to all companies without exception; nor, if the enactment were confined within proper limits, would there, I conceive, be any serious difficulty in preparing it. So long, however, as Parliament proceeds as it has done, to legislate first for one kind of company, and then for another, consolidating some laws, and leaving others untouched, so long will the law relating to companies retain its unenviable notoriety of being, as it is, so intricate, confused, and perplexing as to defy all attempts thoroughly to understand it.

"Again: in legislating for companies, the very serious error has been committed of descending too much into detail. Every company should be allowed to make its own regulations for the transaction of its own business, and should not be fettered by minute legislative provisions upon matters of detail and of form. The Joint-stock Companies Act of 1844 is full of mistakes of this kind. Besides requiring all sorts of things to be inserted in a company's deed of settlement, and stating with minuteness what a company, when formed, may do, it goes on to specify in detail the rights of the shareholders, and the powers and qualifications of directors, and to make minute provisions for the taking of accounts, the appointment of auditors, the keeping of registers, and other matters of that kind. Legislative enactments of this description cannot be enforced without a supervision which would be utterly intolerable; nor can the non-observance of them be punished without arousing a general feeling of disgust. They are wholly out of place, and their only practical effect is to throw doubts on the validity of bona fide transactions, and to encourage dishonest people to repudiate their own acts on the ground of some want of conformity with statutory regulations. A vast amount of litigation has been created, and injustice done, by reason of the enactments prescribing the form in which contracts shall be made and shares be accepted; and it would be, probably, not very erroneous to say, that the whole of this litigation and injustice might have been prevented if no such enactments had been made.

"Moreover, enactments of the nature now alluded to are bad, because they cannot be practically carried out.

"I quite admit that it should be incumbent on companies to keep accounts and registers, and that the shareholders should have some clearly-defined rights, whether they have expressly stipulated for them or not; and I am not prepared to deny the expediency of compelling companies to publish periodical statements of their affairs. But what I am desirous of pointing out is, that the Legislature ought to issue no commands which it is impossible to enforce, and the non-observance of which it is inexpedient to punish; and that this principle has not been kept in view in legislating for companies. The more minutely the sovereign power prescribes how things are to be done, the more it trammels its subjects; and when it attempts to lay down rules for carrying on ordinary business, it inevitably does much more harm than good. Such matters are wholly unfit for legislation; and, with a very few exceptions, I think it may be truly said, that every law requiring a particular form to be observed in transacting the ordinary affairs of life is neither more nor less than a public nuisance.

"The mistake of descending too much into detail has been, to some extent, avoided in the Joint-stock Companies Act of 1856, and the device there had recourse to, of appending to the act a set of regulations, which may be either adopted or not, is ingenious and useful. The regulations, not being enacted by the Legislature, may be modified by every company, as occasion may require; and as they have not the force, so neither have they the rigidity, of rules set by the law-giving power. This is a considerable step in the right direction; but much yet remains to be done.

"The foregoing observations, on the evil of descending too much into detail, apply nearly as forcibly to companies' deeds of settlement and regulations as to acts of Parliament.

"The remarks I have made upon the errors committed by the Legislature in dealing with companies apply, it will be observed, to companies as going concerns. But when we turn to what has been done to facilitate the dissolution and winding up of companies unable to carry on their business, we shall find that even still greater mistakes have been made. Most persons who know anything of the practical working of the celebrated Winding-up Acts of 1848 and 1849 will agree in saying that they were productive of almost unmingled evil.

"It was hoped that, by the acts in question, a company of many shareholders might be dissolved and wound up as easily as a partnership of few members, allowance being of course made for increased difficulties consequent on increased numbers of persons concerned. How these hopes have been disappointed—how shareholders, instead of being benefited by the acts, have been ruined by the frightful expense consequent on their application—are matters which are unfortunately only too well known. To what is all this attributable? Mainly, I believe, to the commission of the three following errors, viz.—first, the error of allowing creditors to sue individual shareholders during the pendency of the winding-up proceedings; secondly, the error of allowing the same company to be wound up in bankruptcy, and also and at the same time in Chancery; and, thirdly, the error of intrusting the winding up of companies to persons not sitting in public, and not interested in bringing the proceedings to a speedy termination. The first two of these errors have, however, been recently corrected, and the evil arising from the third has been considerably mitigated; and since creditors have been restrained from levying execution against the members of their debtor companies which are being wound up, and since official managers have been brought more under the direct control of the equity judges, the evils before complained of have been greatly diminished. In the practical working of the Winding-up Acts there is, however, still great room for improvement."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 19, 1861.

SOME of the principal measures passed by Parliament last session for the alteration or amendment of the law, such as the Criminal-law Consolidation Acts, the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Amendment Act, the Charitable Uses Act, and the Statute-law Revision Act, have been already noticed or commented upon at some length in our former numbers; we propose now to notice some of the minor, though by no means unimportant, statutes of last session, which it will be useful for the lawyer to bear in mind in actual practice.

Let us, however, before doing so, reiterate an opinion we have often expressed, that it is much to be regretted that session after session no attempt is made to lessen the bulk of public general statutes, by the publication, in a separate form, of those acts which are of merely a temporary character, such as the Mutiny, Militia Pay, and Appropriation Acts, and of those of a merely private character, interesting only to a few private individuals, or to some not very extensive locality.

In the first place, some of the provisions in an act passed with regard to Bank of England payments (24 Vict. c. 3) deserve notice. It is well known that formerly the Governor and Company of the Bank of England closed their transfer books for a certain number of days prior to the days fixed for the payment of the half-yearly dividends on Government stocks, in order to their convenience in calculating the dividends due to the several proprietors thereof, and preparing the warrants for the same; and during the period of such closing no transfers were made, except under circumstances of special necessity, and such transfers were attended with great inconvenience, by reason of the stocks so transferred carrying the right to the current half-year's dividend. In order to increase the facilities in the transfer of such stock it is enacted that the Governor and Company of the Bank of England may close the books for the transfer of the several stocks and annuities respectively on any day in the month preceding that in which the dividends thereon respectively shall by law be payable; and the persons who, on the day of the closing of such books, were inscribed as the proprietors of any shares of and in such stocks and annuities respectively, shall, as between them and the transferees thereof, be the persons entitled to the then current half-year's dividend thereon; and the persons to whom any transfer shall be made after the day of the closing of such books shall not be entitled to the then current half-year's dividend on such stock, but shall take the same exclusive of the right to the said half-yearly dividend, provided that the period for which such books of transfer shall be closed shall not exceed fifteen days (sect. 7). Similar provisions are made with reference to the transfer of stock created by the Secretary of State in Council of India, under the authority of certain acts of Parliament (sect. 10). Similar provisions are also by another act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 35) made with reference to stocks and annuities transferable at the Bank of Ireland (sect. 1); and by the same act provision is made for limiting the periods for closing the books of the Banks of England and Ireland against mutual transfers of stocks during the period of three clear days preceding the day or days on which their books shall be respectively closed for the purpose of dividend, prior to the day or days fixed for payment of the same (sect. 2).

The Courts of Chancery and Common Law having of late years, with regard to the extent both of their jurisdiction and practice, been greatly improved, the Admiralty Court has at length met with the attention of the Legislature. The Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 10), does much to extend its jurisdiction and improve its procedure. It gives the High Court of Admiralty jurisdiction over claims for building, equipping, or repairing ships, if, at the time of the institution of the suit, the ship or its proceeds were under arrest of the Court (sect. 4); also jurisdiction as to claims for necessities (sect. 5); for damage to cargo imported (sect. 6); for damage by any ship (sect. 7); to decide questions as to ownership, possession, or employment and earnings of ships (sect. 8); as to salvage for life (sect. 9); as to claims for wages, and for disbursements by masters of ships (sect. 10); with regard to claims in respect of mortgages duly registered, whether the ship or her proceeds be under the arrest of the Court or not (sect. 11). And the High Court of Admiralty is to have the same powers over any British ship, or any share therein, as are conferred upon the High Court of Chancery in England by sects. 62, 63, 64, and 65 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (sect. 12); and whenever any ship or vessel, or the proceeds thereof, are under arrest of the Court of Admiralty, such Court is to have the same powers as are conferred upon the High Court of Chancery in England by the ninth part of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (sect. 13). The Court of Admiralty is, moreover, made a court of record (sect. 14); its decrees and orders are to have the effect of judgments at common law (sect. 15); regulations are laid down as to claims to goods taken in execution (sect. 16); powers of the superior courts of common law to compel answers to interrogatories, and to enforce the production, inspection, and delivery of copies of documents, are conferred upon the High Court of Admiralty (sect. 17); and the jurisdiction conferred by the act may be exercised (sect. 35) either by proceedings in rem or in personam.

With regard to the excise and stamp duties, it must be remembered that by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 21, house agents must be licensed (sects. 11 and 12), or they will be liable to a penalty of 20*l*. Agents, however, employed in the management of landed estates, attorneys, solicitors, proctors, writers to the signet, agents, or procurators admitted in any court of law, certificated conveyancers, licensed auctioneers or appraisers, are not forced to take out a license under the act as house agents (sect. 13). The same act also provides that the stamp on a lease of a furnished house may be adhesive, but when used it must be cancelled (sect. 14).

By an act to amend the laws relating to inland revenue (24 & 25 Vict. c. 91), after various provisions as to spirit licenses, refreshment house licenses, and matters of excise, in dealing with the stamp laws an alteration is made in the stamp duties payable on protests and other notarial acts (sect. 25). Stamp duties on letters or powers of attorney, to vote as proxy in certain cases, are reduced to sixpence (sect. 26), and adhesive stamps may be used for them (sect. 27); such stamp duties to be collected under the laws now in force (sect. 28). The duties upon renewals or continuance of any insurance upon death or personal injury, contained in the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 111, s. 8, are repealed (sect. 29).

On the appointment of new trustees, property which is the subject of one and the same settlement, or of trusts created for the benefit of the same parties, where several deeds are required, one only is to be charged with the full stamp duty, and the others as duplicates (sect. 30). Provisions are then made for duties on duplicates and counterparts, and progressive duties in certain cases (sect. 31); and with regard to adhesive stamps being affixed and cancelled by an authorised officer of Inland Revenue (sect. 32); and as to the mode of cancelling adhesive stamps (sect. 33).

Bills of sale must be produced stamped on the filing of copies, and all deeds must be stamped before registration (sect. 34).

Another act connected with the revenue has been passed to amend the law for the collection of stamp duties on probates, administrations, inventories, legacies, and successions (24 & 25 Vict. c. 92). One provision in this act requires special notice, viz. the third, which enacts that no return of stamp duty paid upon any probate or letters of administration in England or Ireland, or any inventory in Scotland, shall be made or allowed in respect of any voluntary debt due from any person dying after the 28th day of June, 1861, which shall be expressed to be payable on the death of such person, or payable under any instrument which shall not have been bonâ fide delivered to the donee thereof three months before the death of such person.

Another very useful act of last session is the Act to afford facilities for the better Ascertainment of the Law of Foreign Countries when pleaded in Courts within her Majesty's Dominions (24 Vict. c. 11). By this act superior courts within her Majesty's dominions may remit a case, with queries, to a court of any foreign state with which her Majesty may have made a convention for that purpose, for the ascertainment of the law of such state (sect. 1); and the court in which such action* depends may apply such opinion to the facts set forth in the case, with power to remit the case to the same or any other superior court in the foreign state, with or without alteration or amendment (sect. 2); and the courts in her Majesty's dominions may pronounce opinions on cases remitted by a foreign court (sect. 3). This act is, in reality, supplemental to a former act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 63), for the more certain ascertainment of the law administered in one part of her Majesty's dominions when pleaded in the courts of another part thereof.

Previously to the passing of these acts the law of other countries out of the jurisdiction of English courts, whether they were part of the realm—as, for instance, Scotland—or the colonies, or a foreign country out of the dominions of the Crown, was proved as a fact by the opinion of members of the bar of such countries; and no person who has paid any attention to the manner in which such facts were laid before the Court by the adverse parties in a suit, but must feel aware that the legal experts consulted on both sides, unconsciously no doubt, were apt rather to consider the matter submitted to them as the advocates of those who consulted them, than as jurists giving an impartial and judicial opinion, so that on many occasions the conflict of opinion on foreign law tended rather to embarrass than to enlighten the Court. This state of things the two acts we have last noticed will, in all probability, especially in cases of great importance and involving large interests, do much to remedy.

In a subsequent number we propose to call attention to the other acts of last session useful to be borne in mind.

* By the interpretation clause the word "action" includes every judicial proceeding instituted in any court, civil, criminal, or ecclesiastical.

REGULÆ GENERALES.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1861 (24 & 25 VICT.
c. 134, s. 45).

GENERAL ORDERS.

It is ordered as follows; that is to say—

As to Petitions.

1. Petitions for adjudications of bankruptcy filed in the court in London shall forthwith after the filing thereof be directed by the chief registrar, or registrar acting for him, to the commissioners of the court in rotation. A second petition by or against the same debtor, either alone or jointly with any other person or persons, shall be directed to the commissioner who shall have acted in the matter of the first petition, or to whom the same shall have been directed.

2. The memorandum required to be indorsed on a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, before any adjudication shall be made under sect. 70 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, shall be as follows:—

"Take Notice.

"Within is a copy of a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, verified by the oath of the petitioner, and under the seal of her Majesty's Court of Bankruptcy in London [or for the — district], filed in the said court against you, the within-named E. F. The said court has ordered that you do appear on this petition at or before the expiration of — days after the day of service thereof. The petition will be heard at the said court at —, on the — day of —, at which time and place you are to appear by yourself or your solicitor on such petition.

"Dated the — day of —, A.D. —,

"—, Registrar.

(L.S.) "—, Solicitor in the matter of the within petition."

As to First Meeting of Creditors.

3. If the petitioning creditor, or any other creditor, or the bankrupt, desire that the first meeting of creditors, under sect. 109 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, should be held at any other place than the place where the Court of Bankruptcy having jurisdiction in the matter usually holds its sittings, application, supported by affidavit, must be made to the commissioner within seven days after adjudication. If such application be by any other person than the petitioning creditor, one clear day's notice thereof must be given to the petitioning creditor.

4. The statement required to be filed in court under sect. 93 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, by every debtor petitioning for adjudication of bankruptcy against himself and verified by the oath of the petitioner, shall be so filed and verified by such debtor within three days after filing his petition, or within such further time as the commissioner may, under special circumstances, allow, and shall be in the form specified in the Schedule to these Orders annexed, and if such statement be not so filed and verified, the said petition shall be dismissed.

As to Judgment Debtor Summons.

5. Every creditor applying for a judgment debtor summons shall file an affidavit of debt, and such affidavit shall be in the form specified in the Schedule 3 to these Orders annexed.

6. Every judgment debtor summons shall be in the form specified in the Schedule 4 to these Orders annexed.

7. Every such summons shall be indorsed with a notice as follows:—

"Notice to the Party summoned.

"This summons is served upon you pursuant to the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and is founded on an affidavit of debt which was filed in the Court of Bankruptcy in London [or for the — district, at —] on the — day of —, 186—, and you are hereby informed that if, after service of this summons, or due notice thereof, you do not pay the debt and costs within mentioned, or secure or compound for the same to the satisfaction of the creditor, then on your appearance to this summons, or if you shall not appear, having no lawful impediment allowed by the court, and in either case, without the presentation of a petition for adjudication or other proceeding, the court may adjudge you bankrupt.

"This summons was issued by —, of —, solicitor for the plaintiff [or plaintiffs] within named [or, if by a solicitor for a person entitled to receive money under a preceptory order, or interested in enforcing payment of it, alter accordingly.]

"This summons was issued in person by the plaintiff [or plaintiffs] within named, who resides [or reside] at [mention the city, town, or parish, and also the name of the street and number of the house of the plaintiff's residence, if any such there be.]"

8. Every such summons is to be served personally between the hours of nine o'clock in the forenoon and nine o'clock in the afternoon, unless the court issuing the same shall in any case direct that service in some other manner shall be good service, in which case the order of court in that behalf shall be served in like manner as the summons; and such summons is to be served four days at least before the time for appearance therein mentioned, and within two months from the date thereof, including the day of such date, and not afterwards.

As to Forms.

9. The several forms specified in Schedules 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, inclusive, respectively to these Orders annexed, for the several purposes therein stated, shall be observed, and used with such alterations as may be necessary to meet the circumstances of any particular case.

As to Letters of Attorney.

10. Every creditor may by letter of attorney, which may be in the form set forth in Schedule 19, authorise the official assignee in the bankruptcy, or any other person, to represent him at any meeting of the creditors, and to vote for him on any question submitted to the creditors at such meeting, or any adjournment thereof, and also in the choice of the creditors' assignee.

11. Petitions may be printed on paper or parchment. Under special circumstances the commissioner or registrar may, if he shall think fit, receive a written petition.

As to the Messenger.

12. The official assignee, in performing the duty required by sect. 106 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, shall act by the messenger of the court, who shall in all respects, but subject to the directions of the court in any particular case, observe the directions of the official assignee in taking and retaining possession of the bankrupt's estate, and shall act as his deputy; and after the appointment of the creditors' assignee, the messenger shall act under his instructions in keeping or discontinuing possession.

13. Each messenger of the Court of Bankruptcy shall give security to the extent of 1000*l.*, and such security shall be either by way of a joint and several bond, with two sureties, to be approved of by the commissioner, to the chief registrar, in the penal sum of 2000*l.*, or by way of the guarantie of any guarantie society established by charter or act of Parliament in England. Where such security is by way of bond, each messenger shall, on the 1st January in every year, or within one week then next following, make a declaration in writing, to be filed with the chief registrar, that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, his sureties are alive and solvent, and in such declaration state, to the best of his knowledge and belief, any change of residence of any or either of such sureties. Where such security is by way of guarantie, the messenger shall, within the like period, produce and shew to the chief registrar the receipt for the premium or premiums paid to such guarantie society during the preceding year.

Where such security is by way of bond, the messenger shall, on pain of dismissal, give immediate notice in writing to the chief registrar of the death or bankruptcy of any or either of his sureties, and shall in such case, if required, cause a new bond to be executed, to the like amount, by another surety or sureties.

14. The messenger shall from time to time render to the official assignee an account of the fees due to him according to the existing scale, and of payments made by him for assistance in each bankruptcy, and such bill shall be taxed by the proper taxing officer, who shall certify separately the amount of fees due, and the amount of additional payments proper to be allowed. The messenger and creditors' assignee, if any, and if none the official assignee, may attend the taxation. The amount of such fees and additional payments shall be forthwith paid to the messenger by the assignee out of any monies belonging to the estate, or standing to its credit at the Bank of England, and, if the same be insufficient, out of the first monies that shall come to his hands in respect of the estate. Each messenger shall quarterly, on the 13th January, the 13th April, the 13th July, and the 13th October in every year, transmit to the chief registrar an account of the fees received by him in the preceding quarter.

15. On the 13th October, 1862, and each succeeding 13th October, every messenger shall render to the chief registrar an account of the fees received by him during the preceding year, and shall verify the same by oath, and after deducting his salary, under the 32nd section, shall pay over the surplus to the credit of the chief registrar's account, at such time and in such manner as the chief registrar shall direct.

16. It shall be the duty of the messenger to make an inventory of the bankrupt's estate in cases where such inventory shall be deemed requisite by the official assignee. No broker shall be employed for the purpose. Where such inventory has not been made prior to the choice of the creditors' assignee, the inventory shall only be made upon an express direction in writing from the creditors' assignee.

As to Matters to be heard in Chambers.

17. The following matters may, unless the court shall in any case otherwise direct or allow, be heard and determined by the commissioner in chambers; that is to say—

Trader debtor summons.

Judgment debtor summons.

Petition for adjudication of bankruptcy on the petition of a creditor.

Disputed adjudication by debtor.

Applications—

To enlarge time for proceeding on petition for adjudication, or for bankrupt to surrender, or for last examination, or for leave to surrender, where time expired.

For appointing the bankrupt to superintend the management of his estate, or to carry on the trade for behoof of the creditors.

For sittings to examine parties or witnesses.

For order to mortgage or pledge any part of bankrupt's estate upon a resolution of creditors, under sect. 135.

For order to sell book debts, under sect. 137, or for disposal or custody of books and papers, under sect. 138.

Any matter adjourned by the registrar for the consideration of the commissioner, under sect. 52, or any point or matter arising in the course of proceedings before the registrar, and stated by him in a certificate to the commissioner, and upon which any party is desirous of obtaining the opinion of the commissioner, under sect. 53.

But if, in any of the aforesaid matters, the contending parties shall all desire that any question be heard and decided in open court, or if the commissioner shall be of opinion that any matter before him ought to be so heard and decided, it shall be adjourned for that purpose.

Petitions for adjudication of bankruptcy.

Swearing affidavits.

Application for trader debtor's summons, or judgment debtor's summons.

Receiving the surrender of a bankrupt; granting protection thereupon.

Giving requisite directions for notices and advertisements, &c.

Auditing and passing accounts of assignees.

Proceedings for declaration and payment of dividends.

Any of the following matters, when uncontested—

Admitting, expunging, or reducing proofs or claims; ordering payment of taxes, or salary or wages, or sum in respect of apprentice fee; ordering amendments or inspection, or copies or extracts of any proceedings, and taking mortgagee's accounts, and giving leave to mortgagee to bid.

As to Trust Deeds for Benefit of Creditors; Composition and Inspectorship Deeds executed by a Debtor.

19. In order to facilitate the making of entries, under sect. 193, the attorney, or solicitor, or party producing such deed or instrument may deliver to the registrar a memorandum containing the following particulars, or as near thereto as may be:—

Memorandum of Deed or other Instrument to be registered pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act, 1861.

Title of deed, whether deed of assignment, composition, or inspectorship.

Date of deed.

Date of execution by debtor.

Name and description of the debtor as in the deed.

The names and descriptions of the trustees or other parties to the deed, not including the creditors.

A short statement of the nature of the deed.

And such memorandum shall be signed by the attorney, or solicitor, or party producing the deed.

“THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1861.

“A. B.

“Note.—This certificate is available to the said A. B. [the debtor] for all purposes as a protection in bankruptcy.”

20. If a deed be registered under sect. 187 or sect. 194 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, the above forms may be observed, so far as may be applicable.

. As to Prisoners for Debt.

21. The gaoler of every gaol situate within the metropolitan and London districts shall transmit the return required of him by sects. 100 and 104 to the chief registrar of the London court.

22. The gaoler of every gaol situate within a country district, but not situate in the county within which a country commissioner of bankruptcy usually holds his court, shall make the return required of him by sects. 100 and 104 to that county court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy within the jurisdiction of which the gaol is situate, and shall transmit the same to the registrar of such court.

23. The gaoler of every gaol situate in the county within which a district commissioner of bankruptcy usually holds his court shall make the return required of him by sects. 100 and 104 to such district court of bankruptcy, and transmit the same to the registrar of such court.

24. With respect to returns from gaolers of prisons within the metropolitan district, the chief registrar shall assign the same to the registrars of the London court in rotation, and they shall respectively attend the gaols the returns from which are so assigned to them respectively.

25. With respect to returns from gaolers of prisons within the London district (exclusive of the metropolitan district), the chief registrar shall assign such returns, and the duty of attending at the gaols therein mentioned, to the registrars of the several county courts of the districts within which such gaols are severally situate, and the registrars shall respectively attend at such gaols accordingly.

26. The return and order required by sects. 100 and 101 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, may respectively be in the form following:—

“THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1861.

“Return made by —, gaoler of — gaol [or keeper or governor of — prison], in the county of —, this 1st day of —, 18— [or this 2nd day of —, 18—, the first day of the month being a Sunday], in pursuance of the above act, of every person now within the walls, rules, or liberties of the said gaol [or prison], in custody upon any process whatsoever for or by reason of any debt, claim, or demand whatsoever, and not being within any of the exceptions mentioned in sect. 104 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861.

1. (Name of person detained, and date of his imprisonment).

2. (Name and address of every creditor at whose suit such prisoner is imprisoned or detained).

3. (Nature and amount of debt or demand, or debts and demands, for which such prisoner is detained in custody).

4. (Whether such prisoner is willing or refuses to petition the Court of Bankruptcy, or is unable to do so by reason of poverty).

"A true return.
(Signed) "—, Gaoler,
[or Keeper or Governor.]"

"THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1861.

"In the Court of Bankruptcy for the — district [or in the county court for —], — day, the — day of —, 18—.

"I, A. B., a commissioner [or judge] of —, in pursuance of the power conferred upon me by the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, order that —, Esq., a registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy [or —, gentleman, a registrar of the county court], do attend at — gaol [or prison], in the county of —, at — o'clock in the — noon, then and there to examine [here insert the name or names], returned to me by — gaoler of the said gaol [or keeper or governor of the said prison], as a prisoner [or prisoners] confined in the said gaol [or prison] for debt, and to proceed thereon and make order as the said act directs.

(Signed) "—, Commissioner [or Judge]."

And a copy of such order shall be forthwith sent through the general post by the registrar therein named to the gaoler, and also to the execution and detaining creditor of every prisoner included in such return.

27. On the day named in such order the registrar shall attend at the prison and examine every prisoner included in such return, pursuant to the directions contained in sect. 101 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861; and if, upon the result of such examination, he shall think fit to make an order in pursuance of such section, such order may, mutatis mutandis, be in the following form:—

"THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1861.

"In the matter of —, late of —, in the county of —, and now a prisoner for debt in — gaol [or prison], Monday, the — day of —, 18—.

"Whereas, in pursuance of an order of the Court of Bankruptcy for — [or of the county court for —], dated the — day of —, 18—, I, being a registrar of the said court, attended on the day first above mentioned at — gaol [or prison], and there examined A. B., of —, whose examination in writing is filed herewith, whereby it appears that the said A. B., being a trader, had been in prison for debt [or as the case may be], at the suit of —, of —, for fourteen days [or not being a trader, had been in prison for debt, or as the case may be], at the suit of —, of —, for two calendar months, on the said — day of — [the day of the registrar's order], and that the last place of his abode and place of business [or place of abode] within six months of his imprisonment [or within —] was:—

"And having evidence before me of the service of notice of the said order of the said court upon the gaoler of the said gaol [or keeper or governor of the said prison], and upon the execution [and detaining] creditor, I do adjudge the said A. B. a bankrupt, and do declare that the said A. B. became and was bankrupt on the — day of — [the day of the debtor's commitment or detention]; and I do hereby grant the said A. B. protection from arrest from any claim, debt, or demand now due or owing by the said A. B.; and I do hereby order that the said A. B. be forthwith discharged from custody as aforesaid; and I do hereby direct that the said bankruptcy be prosecuted in the Court of Bankruptcy for the — district [or in the county court for —].

"All which I certify.
(Signed) "—, Registrar."

28. In addition to the certificate which the registrar is directed to make, by the 101st section, to the court of which he is registrar, he shall, if a registrar of a county court at the same time, send a copy of his certificate to the Court of Bankruptcy having jurisdiction in the district where the gaol is situate; and if a registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy, he shall send a copy of such certificate to the county court having jurisdiction over the same district.

29. Where adjudication of bankruptcy is made against a debtor on his own petition, or against a debtor in gaol without petition, the first meeting of creditors shall be holden on the fourteenth day after the day of such adjudication, unless such fourteenth day shall happen to be one of the days excepted by the 48th section, and in that case on the day after.

30. Advertisements of adjudication and of the first meeting of creditors shall, in cases of adjudication against debtors on their own petition, and of adjudication against debtors in prison without petition, be published, within four days after such adjudication, in the London Gazette, and in such provincial newspaper or other publication as the commissioner, judge, or registrar shall direct.

31. Bankruptcies of prisoner debtors, upon adjudication made by registrars, which are to be prosecuted in the Court of Bankruptcy, shall in the London district be allotted to the commissioners in rotation. Such allotment shall be made in London by the chief registrar, or registrar acting for him. The commissioner, upon each bankruptcy being allotted to him, shall appoint an official assignee to act in such bankruptcy. After the first meeting of creditors, if no creditors' assignee be appointed, the Lord Chancellor shall appoint a solicitor to act in the prosecution of the bankruptcy.

As to Appeals.

32. All appeals to the Court of Appeal shall be brought on by motion, and no new evidence shall be received on any appeal unless the Court of Appeal shall, on the hearing thereof, so direct.

33. The office of the accountant in bankruptcy shall be open throughout the year for the payment of dividends and money orders, except on the days mentioned in the 48th section of the act.

As to Stamps.

34. Every officer of the Court of Bankruptcy who shall receive any document to which a stamp shall be affixed, or upon which a stamp shall be impressed, shall immediately upon the receipt of such document deface the stamp thereon, by writing or impressing upon such stamp the words "Court of Bankruptcy," and no such document shall be filed or delivered until the stamp thereon shall have been defaced in manner aforesaid, and it shall be the duty of the party presenting such document to see that such defacement has been duly made.

As to Short-hand Writers.

35. Whenever a short-hand writer shall be employed, pursuant to sect. 61 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, such short-hand writer shall, if required, within (two) days after the taking of any examination, or the evidence of parties, deliver to the registrar a faithful and true transcript of such examination or evidence, and shall be paid in respect thereof a fee of one guinea for attendance, and 8d. per folio of every (ninety) words contained in such transcript, and such payment shall be made by the party on whose application the employment of a short-hand writer has been directed by the court, or, if the court thinks proper, out of the estate.

The short-hand writers shall be appointed by the commissioner or judge.

36. Until further order, and in cases not otherwise provided by these Orders, the Rules and Orders in Bankruptcy bearing date respectively the 19th October, 1852, the 3rd February, 1855, the 19th May, 1855, the 19th June, 1856, and the 24th March, 1857, shall, where applicable, and with such variations in the forms specified in the Schedules thereof as may be necessary, be acted upon for the several purposes mentioned in the 45th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. In 1 vol. royal 8vo., 1855, price 14. 16s. cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinâ malidus), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 26, 1861.

IN concluding our observations on the statutes recently passed for the consolidation and amendment of the criminal law, we observed that those enactments, however open to objection in certain respects, were a valuable step in the direction of law reform. We also alluded to, and now proceed to the more particular consideration of, another statute of last session, the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 101, intitled "An Act for promoting the Revision of the Statute Law, by repealing divers Acts and Parts of Acts which have ceased to be in force," which is even a more important step in that direction, not so much on account of the enactments which it contains, as for the important announcement in its preamble, indicating far greater changes in future sessions of Parliament.

The statute in question—the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 101—commences with the following recital:—

"Whereas, with a view to the revision of the statute law, and particularly to the preparation of an edition of the statutes comprising only enactments which are in force, it is expedient that divers acts and parts of acts which have ceased to be in force otherwise than by express and specific repeal should be expressly and specifically repealed: and whereas the acts mentioned in the schedule to this act have so ceased to be in force to the extent specified in the third column of the said schedule: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows."

The 1st section then repeals, for the future, either wholly or partially, the acts mentioned in its schedule. The number of statutes thus wholly or partially repealed amounts to between 800 and 900; the earliest being the 11 Geo. 3, c. 32, relative to militia pay, and the latest the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 125—the Metropolitan Sewers Continuance and Amendment Act.

Perhaps the acts thus repealed are supposed to be all those of the category to which they belong which are to be found in the century between the 1 Geo. 3 (1760) and the present time.

The 2nd section provides as a short title for the act, "The Statute-law Revision Act, 1861."

The Legislature has thus announced the intention of our rulers to prepare the way for an edition of the statutes comprising only enactments which are in force—unquestionably a most desirable object, but the literal attainment of which is well nigh, if not altogether, impossible: because, for this purpose, it would be necessary for those who have charge of that great project of reform to go through the whole of the statute book, reading it all along in connexion with the common law and the decisions upon the statutes, and then determine, authoritatively; first, that every portion of the abbreviated statute book which it is intended to call into existence is law, and has not been repealed, either directly or by implication; and, secondly, that every statute not found in that book is not law, as having been repealed. The magnitude of this task must be obvious at a glance. But although a literal fulfilment of the promise contained in the preamble to the Statute-law Revision Act may be impossible, a close and most valuable approximation to it is perfectly attainable; and this, perhaps, is all that the preamble to that statute intended to promise. A statute book might easily be drawn up, declaring that all statutes not contained in it are not law, without professing to guarantee that none of the statutes contained in it are repealed. Such a work would be a dwarf compared with the enormous and ill-digested statute book we possess at present. And there is one reason why it is not always advisable, on passing a consolidation or amending act, to remove the old act from the statute book immediately. The language of the original and consolidating act being sometimes completely identical, and sometimes partly so, the judicial interpretation put on the earlier statute remains obligatory in the former case, and is a valuable guide to the exposition of the new statute in the latter. But to appreciate and apply all this, judges and practitioners must necessarily have both the old and the new statute before them.

In the great and noble design of thus improving the statute book, much assistance is afforded by the repeal which has taken place of late years of a large number of statutes and parts of statutes, and by the number of others which have become obsolete or inoperative. Most of what are called "consolidation acts," of which so many have been passed in the present century, repeal a large number of acts; many old ones, for instance, were swept away to make room for "Peel's Acts," the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, the recent acts for consolidating and amending the criminal law, &c.; and a few years since a statute was passed, the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64, by which about 120 acts, "together with all enactments, if any, confirming, continuing, or perpetuating the same," were wholly repealed. The statutes in this last act had long been thoroughly obsolete; the earliest mentioned is the Statute of Westminster 2 (13 Edw. 1), c. 33, and the last the 17 Geo. 3, c. 42; while the bare titles of some of them—as, for instance, the 25 Edw. 3, stat. 5, c. 22, "He that purchaseth a Provision in Rome for an Abbey shall be out of the King's Protection, and any Man may do with him as with the King's Enemy," and the 1 Hen. 6, c. 3, "What sort of Irishmen only may come to dwell in England"—shew the absurdity and mischief of retaining such enactments in the statute book. To all this must be added the numerous mutiny acts, excise acts, and other acts relating to the revenue, most of which are of a transitory nature; together with the large number of acts professedly temporary, and those acts which only continue or perpetuate other acts. Many of these, especially of the first three classes, are immensely bulky.

We trust, therefore, that we are now in the fair way of reform in our statute book—a reform likely to be the more effective because it must necessarily be slow; and have only to express our sincere hope, that having entered upon this great undertaking, nothing will induce our rulers to depart from or delay it. When the statute book shall have been thus expurgated and reduced to a reasonable size, the question of "codification" of our laws generally will fairly present itself—in other words, whether the sweeping away our existing system of law, and constructing a new one out of materials selected from it, together with any fresh materials that it may be deemed advisable to introduce; or the reforming the old law, by introducing into it such amendments as are required to suit the changes of habits and manners of our people and the general progress of society, is the safest principle of legislation. But the discussion of this great question is at present premature.

ELAND v. BAKER.—ADDING PROVISIONS TO A DEED.

SOME time ago (ante, p. 331) we took occasion to observe on the distinction between the interpretation of the words of an instrument, and the interpretation of the instrument itself, and on the importance of recognising the true nature of what is done when a rule of interpretation is applied which adds to the instrument a term not expressed in it, and probably not contemplated by the framer of it. We said, "The business of the interpreter is, first to ascertain what the writer has actually expressed, and then to supply such further terms, which he has not expressed and probably did not intend or contemplate, as are necessary to be supplied in order to carry the expressed intention into effect;" and we illustrated the latter process by an example of two legacies in a will, each of them given to a class of persons, both expressed in the same terms, and both expressed without any indication, and probably without any forethought, of the time when the class should be ascertained, and therefore requiring that term to be supplied, not upon conjecture of an intention which probably never existed, but according to a certain rule of interpretation. The interpolation is made, not for the purpose of altering the expressed intention, but, from the necessity of the case, to make the expressed intention work—to define, according to rule, what has been left undefined and must be defined before any action can ensue. The bold introduction, under some of these rules of interpretation, in order to arrive at a practical result, of terms which are wholly unsanctioned by the language of the instrument, has often been supposed to be the result of conjectures as to the probable intention of the parties, and has been sometimes followed, as if it were an example of a justifiable qualification of the expressed intention, in order to effect some presumed intention. This is a grave error. There are cases where, on the ground of mistake or fraud, the expressed terms of a written contract may be rectified; but the rules under which that is done belong to a wholly distinct branch of law or equity.

There are also cases where the literal purport of an instrument is so absurd or improbable, and the terms in which it is expressed lie so near to those in which a rational and probable intention might have been expressed, that the Court feels justified in assuming that the framer of the instrument did not know how to express himself, and, with some stretch of authority, gives effect to the suggested rational scheme. These are cases standing each on its own foundation, and cannot be generalised into a system of rules. But generally we may say, that when an instrument expresses a lawful intention which can be carried into effect, no Court is justified in inserting any condition or qualification which is not required for the purpose of correcting manifest or proved error.

We think that these distinctions have been overlooked in the recent case of Eland v. Baker (7 Jur. N. S., part 1, p. 956). The instrument to be construed was a marriage settlement, by which the father of the lady settled lands upon trust for the lady's separate use during her life, then for the husband for life, and then for the children of the marriage as the parents should appoint, and in default of appointment, then equally. The settlement contained a proviso that it should be lawful for the father, the husband, and the wife, with the consent in writing of the trustees, or, after the death of the father, for the husband and wife with the like consent, by deed absolutely to revoke all the uses, trusts, provisos, and declarations contained in the settlement concerning the property, and by the same or any other deed to limit and declare new and other uses, trusts, provisos, and declarations in lieu of and in substitution for those revoked. After the birth of children of the marriage one of the trustees lent 1000*l.* to the husband, and took, as security for the repayment of it, a mortgage of the settled property, by a deed in which the father, wife, and husband revoked the uses of the settlement, and limited the property to the use of the mortgagee in fee, with power of sale. The Master of the Rolls held that the title could not be forced on a purchaser from the mortgagee. He relied principally on the words relating to the appointment of new uses in lieu of the old uses. A simple power of revocation would have given it back to the father. "I read this as a power of revocation for the purpose of relimiting the estate, and relimiting the estate to any new uses and trusts. How must the estate be relimited? To what trusts, and with what declarations? To trusts for the benefit of the persons who are the cestuis que trust of the instrument, according to the true scope and intention of the deed itself. Here is an agreement, upon marriage, that certain lands of the father of the lady shall be settled to the uses therein contained—that is to say, to the use of the husband and wife, and to the children of the marriage. This power of revocation in the settlement must mean a revocation in relation to and for the benefit of the persons who are parties to the marriage, and the consent of the trustees must be given for that purpose." His Honor then suggested that on a different construction the power would enable the husband, after the father's death, with the consent of the trustees (his wife being, in the eyes of the Court, a nullity), to appropriate the estate to his own use, and that the Court could never allow that to be done. The trustees were to exercise their discretion in favour of the persons they were bound to protect. No great stress was laid on the circumstance that the trustee was the mortgagee. Of course, if the trustee had purchased the estate under the power of revocation and new appointment, or had exacted unreasonable interest, the transaction could not have stood. But, under the circumstances of the case, we venture to submit that the Court had no jurisdiction to defeat the clearly-expressed intention of the parties. The argument of the mortgagee's counsel was irresistible. A power to certain persons to revoke the uses of a marriage settlement, and to limit the property in any other manner, is a power which may lawfully be introduced into a settlement; and if the parties had intended such a power they could not have expressed their intention more completely than by the words used in the settlement in question. The construction adopted by the Master of the Rolls would strike out of the settlement both the power of revoking and the power of resettling; for a power to resettle "to trusts for the benefit of the persons who are the cestuis que trust of the instrument" is a nullity. If you resettle in trust for the same persons, and give them the same interests as before, you do nothing. If you resettle so as to take from one in order to give to another, you do not resettle for the benefit of the cestuis que trust. In this very case the resettlement consisted in giving to one of the cestuis que trust—the husband—a charge of 1000*l.* at the expense of the others. The object of the parties was plainly this—to reserve to themselves the power of disposing differently of the property if they should think fit, and to place some check upon themselves in the exercise of that power, by making the sanction of the trustees necessary. It might be advisable, for the sake of assisting the husband in a profitable enterprise, to raise money for his benefit; and the father, the wife, and the trustees might allow him to do it. A simple power of revocation would not have been sufficient; it would merely have revested the estate in the father or his heirs, and the power was to subsist after his death. There was added a power to limit any new or other uses or trusts. The intention was reasonable and probable; the words fully and completely expressed it; nothing was necessary to be added or expunged for the purpose of carrying the instrument into effect; there was no suggestion of fraud, mistake, or absurdity; and we cannot help thinking, that if the counsel who argued the case, and the judge who decided it, had taken time to consider and distinguish the several grounds upon which alone Courts have jurisdiction to alter or add to the terms of a written instrument, the case would have been decided differently. It is true that the decision was only a refusal to force the title under the mortgage on a purchaser; but the case was not within the rule as to doubtful titles. A title is doubtful when it depends on facts which are not sufficiently proved, or on a question of law as to which courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction are in conflict. It is not doubtful merely because a judge feels a difficulty in making up his mind about it.

REMARKS ON THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, BY THE COMMITTEE OF THE MANCHESTER ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROTECTION OF TRADE.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE MANCHESTER ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROTECTION OF TRADE.

GENTLEMEN,—The new Bankruptcy Act having come into operation, we beg to call the attention of the members of this association, and of the mercantile public generally, to one or two points of very serious import arising out of the changes introduced into the administration of the law of debtor and creditor.

By the new act the relative positions of the creditors' assignee and the official assignee are completely changed; and, before accepting the office of assignee, persons ought to make themselves acquainted with the responsibilities they will incur.

Creditors' Assignee.

The clauses referring to the duties and responsibilities of the creditors' assignee, and which provide that every three months his accounts shall be verified upon oath, and submitted to the audit of the official assignee; shall find security, if a majority of the creditors and the court require it; shall be liable to dismissal by a majority in value of the creditors; and may at any time be called upon by one-fourth in value of the creditors to shew cause why he should not be dismissed; will operate as a serious impediment in the way of any mercantile man undertaking the office, and therefore will have a tendency to throw the management of the estate into the hands of the bankrupt's friends.

Deed Clauses.

The changes introduced by what are known as the "deed clauses" are most important, and demand the earnest attention of all persons interested in the settlement of insolvent estates.

These clauses stand in the act as sects. 192 to 199, both inclusive, and they were specially intended, as was said, for the benefit and advantage of the commercial classes; but we fear that, in practice, they will prove not only no boon, but a positive injury.

The object of the 192nd section is to bind a minority of creditors to an arrangement which has been accepted by "a majority in number, representing three-fourths in value, of the creditors." The importance of making deeds so binding is self-evident, because it is notorious that scarcely a case arises without one or more creditors standing out with a view to obtain a preference.

The following are the conditions which must be fulfilled before any deed can be made so binding:—

1. A majority in number, representing three-

- fourths in value, of the creditors, must assent to the deed.
2. Any trustees appointed must execute the deed.
3. Execution by the debtor must be attested by a solicitor.
4. Deed must be registered within twenty-eight days.
5. On so doing, an affidavit by the debtor, or some person able to depose thereto, or a certificate by the trustees, that the required majority have, in writing, assented to or approved of such deed or instrument, and also stating the value of the debtor's property and creditors comprised in such deed, must be left with the deed.
6. The deed must be stamped (as required by sect. 195) with an ad valorem duty of 5s. per cent. on the sworn or certified value of the estate and effects, in addition to the ordinary stamp duty.
7. Immediately on the execution of the deed by the debtor, possession of all the property comprised therein, of which the debtor can give or order possession, shall be given to the trustees.

As the result of considerable experience, we would say that in many, if not in most, cases it is practically impossible to obtain the consent of "a majority in number, representing three-fourths in value, of the creditors" above 10%, within the twenty-eight days given for registration.

That in the case of large estates, no trustee, and certainly no solicitor, will, at the risk of not being repaid, advance the stamp duty, which, in addition to the former duty, is to be impressed on the deed before registration, and which may reach 200%.

That the debtor cannot be relied on to make an affidavit, as required, of his creditors and estate, because in many cases an insolvent is afterwards advised that he has done wrong in executing the deed.

And that there will be great, and perhaps insuperable, difficulty in a trustee obtaining in the twenty-eight days all the information to enable him to certify "the amount in value of the property and creditors of the debtor comprised in such deed." In cases of estates comprising considerable assets abroad, it is clearly impossible to do this.

Again: how is a trustee conscientiously to certify to the assent of the requisite number and value of creditors to the deed? Is he personally to obtain their signatures, or is he to take for granted that a number of signatures shewn to him are the genuine signatures of the creditors?

It does not appear whether, if any error is made in such certificate, or in the calculation on which it is based, it will vitiate the registration; but if it will, then an unintentional error may upset everything; and if it will not, then a false certificate may be given in a fraudulent case, and the creditors will be bound thereby.

Composition Deeds not included.

But the most important objection is to the condition, that "immediately on the execution thereof (the deed) by the debtor, possession of all the property comprised therein, of which the debtor can give or order possession, shall be given to the trustees." Now, the essence of an arrangement, in case of composition, generally is, that it is considered for the benefit of all parties that the debtor shall remain in possession of his property and carry on his trade, but that the creditors shall have power to take possession on default of payment of an instalment, or other circumstances making it expedient to do so.

No such arrangement will, under the new statute, be binding on any creditor who shall not execute the deed, because such a deed would not comply with the seventh condition of sect. 192.

Possession by the trustees would frustrate the whole arrangement; and therefore, we presume, in nearly all cases of composition, there will be the same opportunity as heretofore of an unscrupulous creditor obtaining a preference over the others, or throwing the estate into the Gazette.

Stamp Duty.

We have before incidentally noticed the stamps on deeds, and the commercial community, who have been such special objects of the Lord Chancellor's care, should understand, that, after having made bad debts, their dividends are to be lessened by a stamp duty (in addition to the 35s. formerly impressed) of 5s. per cent. on the value of the property to which they must resort for their dividends, the maximum amount of duty being 200%. The stamp is double the present stamp on mortgages.

Deeds of Assignment cannot be relied upon as Acts of Bankruptcy.

Deeds of assignment are now placed in a peculiar position.

Sect. 194 requires that every deed (of course, whether it be a deed under sect. 192 or otherwise) executed by a debtor for the benefit of creditors shall be registered within twenty-eight days from its execution by the debtor, "and in default thereof it shall not be received as evidence."

Sect. 198 provides that a certificate of the registration of such deed shall be a protection to the debtor against any process of common law, unless by "leave of the court;" and that it "shall be available to the debtor for all purposes as a protection in bankruptcy." Now, as a protection in bankruptcy is absolute, the creditor could not avail himself of the "leave of the court" to proceed even if obtained.

Sect. 199 provides that, pending the time allowed for registration, proceedings in bankruptcy, if commenced, shall be stayed, "and if the deed be duly registered the petition shall be dismissed."

The combined effect of these clauses will be, that in future no deed of assignment can be relied upon as an act of bankruptcy, because, if not registered, it cannot be received as evidence, under sect. 194; and if registered, it is a bar to proceedings in bankruptcy, under sect. 199, and is a protection at common law, under sect. 198.

It seems to us that this will open the door to great frauds, perpetrated under the protection of an act of Parliament, and against which the creditors will have no remedy.

Assignment the Means of concealing Fraud.

A fraudulent assignment to a man of straw will, if registered (and there is nothing to prevent registration), act practically as an absolute protection against all further inquiry; and glaring exposures, like those which have taken place in recent bankruptcies, will probably in future be avoided by the judicious selection of a friendly trustee, who will make all things smooth and comfortable. As the laws stood previously, an assignment could have been upset, because it was an act of bankruptcy; but now, although it may still continue an act of bankruptcy in a technical sense, it is one which is incapable of proof, or which itself defeats the issue of a fiat.

We have thus pointed out the bearing of the act on the ordinary mode of settlements by deed, which, in a large majority of cases, are either by deeds of composition or deeds of assignment; and we have shewn that the former are excluded from the benefits of the act, though not from the taxation clause, and that the latter are rendered dangerous instruments.

These defects, amongst others, were pointed out during the discussions in Parliament, but the clamour was for "the bill, the whole bill, and nothing but the bill;" and although the House of Lords, after a very patient consideration, amended or struck out most of the objectionable clauses, they were nearly all restored subsequently, and now form part of the law of the land.

We are, gentlemen, yours respectfully,

COUNTY COURT ORDERS IN BANKRUPTCY.

GENERAL ORDERS FOR REGULATING THE PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

IN pursuance of the powers vested in us by the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, we, James Manning, John Bury Dasant, Douglas Denon Heath, John Worledge, and William Furner, have framed the following General Orders, and do certify the same to the Lord Chancellor accordingly, this 12th October, 1861:—

1. The General Orders of the Court of Bankruptcy made in pursuance of the Bankrupt-law Consolidation Act, 1849, the Bankruptcy Act, 1854, and of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, except the Orders Nos. 119 to 158, both inclusive, of the Orders of the 19th October, 1852, the Order of the 3rd February, 1855, the Orders of the 19th May, 1855, the Order of the 19th June, 1856, and the Orders Nos. 10, 11, 15, and 18 of the Orders of the 12th October, 1861, shall be the Rules and Orders for regulating the practice and procedure of the county courts in matters of bankruptcy in such courts, so far as the same are applicable and not inconsistent with any of the following Orders.

2. The place of sitting of each county court in matters of bankruptcy shall be the place at which the court now holds, or may hereafter hold, its sittings for the general business of the court, under the provisions of the act 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, or of any act amending or extending the provisions of the same.

3. The times of the sitting of each county court in matters of bankruptcy shall be those appointed for the transaction of the general business of the court, unless the judge of any such court shall otherwise order, and shall appoint a special day or days for a sitting of the court in matters of bankruptcy.

4. In matters of bankruptcy in the county courts the proceedings shall be in the several forms set forth in the schedule attached to these Orders; and where forms for any proceeding in such matters are not provided in the schedule, the forms in use in the Court of Bankruptcy shall be used, so far as the same are applicable.

5. Every petition for adjudication of bankruptcy presented under the 94th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, shall be printed on parchment or paper, and shall be in the form set forth in the schedule, and, except so far as may be necessary to adapt the printed form to the circumstances of the particular case, no alterations, interlineations, or erasures shall be permitted without the leave of the court or a registrar thereof.

6. Forthwith after the filing in court of the statement of a person presenting a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy against himself, in pursuance of sect. 93 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, the high bailiff shall transmit, by post, a notice, in the form set forth in the schedule, to each creditor named in such statement, informing him of the fact of such petition having been presented.

7. The affidavit to be made by a person petitioning for adjudication of bankruptcy against himself in form pauperis shall be in the form set forth in the schedule, and shall be annexed to the petition.

8. The notice of an order for a registrar to attend at a gaol for the examination of prisoners, in pursuance of sect. 101 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, required to be given to the gaoler, and to the execution and detaining creditors of such prisoners, shall be sent by post by the messenger of the court, and such notice shall be in the form set forth in the schedule.

9. The registrar of a county court shall, as official assignee, assist a bankrupt in preparing the statement of his accounts, by giving him access to his books and papers, and by furnishing him with all information necessary to enable him to comply, in such statement, with the requirements of the court.

10. Notice of any sale to be made by auction under the provisions of sect. 137 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, shall be given in two local newspapers at least fourteen clear days before the sale shall be held.

11. It shall be the duty of the high bailiff to attend all meetings of the court in matters of bankruptcy, and to serve all summonses, notices, &c., to execute all warrants and processes, to prepare and cause to be inserted in the Gazette and newspapers all notices of meetings to be holden in pursuance of this act, and to do and perform all other things which are required to be done or performed by a messenger of the Court of Bankruptcy.

12. The costs of printing and postages in any matters of bankruptcy in the county courts shall be defrayed out of the proceeds of the bankrupt's estate, and when such estate is insufficient to pay such costs the same shall be paid out of the chief registrar's account.

Order of Discharge to Gaoler by Judge upon Report of Registrar that a Prisoner refuses to be sworn &c.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1861.

At the County Court of —, holden at —.

In the matter of A. B., late of —, in the county of —, a prisoner for debt in — gaol [or prison] on the — day of —, 18—.

Whereas, by a return made to this court by you as gaoler of — gaol [or keeper of — prison], dated the — day of —, 18—, it appeared that the above A. B. was detained in the said gaol [or prison] for debt [or as the fact was stated]:

And whereas I did, in pursuance of the above act, order the registrar of this court to attend at the said gaol [or prison] on the — day of —, 18—, then and there to examine the prisoner as directed by the said act:

And whereas it appears, by a report of the said registrar, dated the — day of —, 18—, that the said registrar did so attend, but that the said prisoner did [here set out the registrar's report as to the refusal of the prisoner]:

And whereas I, in pursuance of the above act, have, by warrant under my hand and the seal of this court, committed the said prisoner to her Majesty's gaol of —, and adjudged him to be a bankrupt:

I do hereby order that the said prisoner be given up by you to the high bailiff or one of the bailiffs of this court, upon production to you of this order; and for so giving up the prisoner this shall be your sufficient warrant.

ARNOLD'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE OUT OF SESSIONS.

In 1 vol. 8vo., price 11. 6s. in cloth boards.

A SUMMARY OF THE DUTIES OF A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE OUT OF SESSIONS. Summary Convictions. With an Introduction, numerous Notes, and a full Index. By THOMAS JAMES ARNOLD, of Lincoln's-inn, Esq., one of the Metropolitan Magistrates.

H. Sweet; V. & R. Stevens & Sons; and W. Maxwell.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY, U. K.—
LECTURES 1861-62.—THREE COURSES OF LECTURES will be delivered in the Hall of the Society on MONDAY and FRIDAY EVENINGS in the Months of November, December, January, February, and March next, at Eight o'clock precisely.

EQUITY LECTURES, by THOMAS HENRY HADDAN, Esq., Barrister at Law.

The general subject of this Course of Lectures will be

THE ADMINISTRATIVE JURISDICTION OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY.

In the treatment of this subject it is proposed to consider—

I. The Nature and Origin of this Branch of the Jurisdiction.

The Exercise of the Jurisdiction in modern Practice—

I. In the Administration generally of the Estates of Deceased Persons.

II. In the Administration generally of other Trusts.

III. In the Administration of Trust Estates under the Special Statutory Jurisdictions created or extended by recent Acts of Parliament.

Taking these heads in their order.

2 to 5. The Administration of the Estates of Deceased Persons, testate and intestate, will be considered in detail, in principle and practice.

The Administration of other Trust Estates will be considered in like manner; and herein will then occur for consideration—

6. . . . I. The Administration by the Court of Public or Charitable Trusts.

7 and 8. II. In the case of Private Trusts the Administration by the Court of the Estates of Infants or Wards of Court; and herein—

a. Of the Appointment of Guardians.

b. The Allowance of Maintenance.

c. The Approval of Marriages, and the Execution of the Settlements thereon, under the general Jurisdiction of the Court.

9. . . . III. The Administering of Trust Estates by the Court in other cases.

10 to 12. The Statutory Jurisdiction of the Court above referred to will be considered under the following heads:—

I. The Administration and Distribution under the Jurisdiction created or extended by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, of Compensation Monies paid into Court by Railway Companies, and other Companies of a public nature within the scope of that Act.

II. The Administration and Distribution of Monies paid into Court under the Trustees Relief Acts of 1847 and 1849.

III. The Administration of Money paid into Court under the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 32, in the case of Infants and Persons beyond Seas.

IV. The Exercise, as part of the Administrative Jurisdiction of the Court, of the Powers vested in the Court by—

a. The Trustees Acts of 1850 and 1852.

b. The Infants Settlement Act, 1855.

c. The Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Acts, 1856 and 1858.

d. The Law of Property Amendment Acts, 1859, 1860.

In the above prospectus the Arabic numerals indicate the probable numbers of the Lectures in which the various branches of the subject will be found to be treated of; the Roman numerals and letters indicate only logical subdivisions.

NOTE.—The Special Jurisdictions in Bankruptcy and Insolvency, though in their nature administrative, are taken out of the subject now under consideration by the Legislation, which recast, and in a sense re-founded, both these Jurisdictions.

CONVEYANCING LECTURES, by FREEMAN OLIVER HAYNES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

1. Introductory Statement.—Range of the Lectures defined.—History of Conveyancing.—Peculiarities of Legal as distinguished from Literary Composition.

2. Conditions of Sale by Public Auction.—Private Contracts for Sale.

3 & 4. Conveyances of Freeholds, and Assurances of Copyholds, on Sales.

5. Assignments of Leaseholds, and of Equitable Interests in Personal Estate, on Sales.

6. Mortgages.

7. Settlements of Real Estate.

8. Settlements of Personal Estate.

9. Wills.

10 & 11. Miscellaneous Instruments.

12. Inquiries, Searches, and Notices to be made and given in Conveyancing Transactions.

The above order will be adhered to as closely as the limited time allotted to each Lecture will permit. The works most frequently referred to will be Davidson's Precedents in Conveyancing and Lewin on Trusts (4th edition).

COMMON LAW AND MERCANTILE LAW LECTURES, by WILLIAM MURRAY, Esq., Barrister at Law.

These Lectures will comprise some of the ordinary Actions at Law, and the legal questions which most frequently arise in them, such as—

ASSUMPSIT—For Goods bargained and sold, and for not delivering and not accepting Goods agreed to be sold, and on Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes and Cheques, and Guarantees.

DEBT—For Work and Labour, on Bonds, and on Awards.

THE CONSOLIDATED CRIMINAL STATUTES of ENGLAND and IRELAND, passed in the last Session of Parliament, with Notes, Forms of Indictments, and Evidence.

The Consolidated Criminal Statutes, passed in the last Session of Parliament, are of grave importance to all who administer or assist in administering the criminal justice of the country. The judge, the magistrate, the barrister, the attorney—all must make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the criminal law as it is now declared or altered by these statutes, to enable them to perform the duties of their station with satisfaction to themselves or with benefit to the community. Besides very elaborate and explanatory notes, the volume contains forms of indictments for nearly every offence mentioned in it, with the evidence necessary to sustain them. To the magistrate at quarter sessions this will be invaluable, and in petty sessions also he will find it most useful, as it will apprise him of the evidence which will be necessary to convict the offender at quarter sessions or the assizes, so that he may insist on such evidence being produced, in order that he may include it in the examinations. The arrangement of the work will be found very much to simplify the many subjects of which it treats, and a programme prefixed to each statute will enable the reader at once to place his hand on any part of the subject he may wish to consult.

BARRY'S STATUTORY JURISDICTION IN CHANCERY, 1861.

A TREATISE ON THE STATUTORY JURISDICTION OF THE COURT OF CHANCERY. With Forms. By WILLIAM WHITTAKER BARRY, of Lincoln's-inn, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 1861. Price 15s. cloth.

"The utility of such a work, if well done, is manifest. The law is presented in a shape fitted to be read and remembered, and the student will find it especially valuable. We regret that the many claims upon our space forbid indulgence in extract, but the reader will perhaps accept our assurance that the work has been very well done; the law is conveniently arranged for reference, and stated with singular clearness and precision."—Law Times, Feb. 23, 1861.

"A book like the present was really a desideratum. At all events, nowhere else can be found so clear and intelligible an account, in a substantive form, of the Trustee Acts of 1850 and 1852, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, Sir George Turner's Act, the Trustee Relief Acts, the Infants' Settlement and Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Acts, and other statutes under which the Court exercises its special jurisdiction."—Solicitors' Journal, Feb. 9, 1861.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 2, 1861.

THE daily papers of last week contain the following report of a case tried at the Central Criminal Court, before Mr. Commissioner Kerr, on Tuesday, the 22nd October:—

"Henry Hayes, a respectable looking young man, was indicted for maliciously shooting at and wounding John Monkett.

"Mr. Sleigh prosecuted on behalf of the London, Brighton, and South-coast Railway Company.

"The learned counsel, in his opening address, briefly stated that upon the afternoon of the 23rd of last month the prosecutor, who is an engine-driver in the employ of the railway, was coming up with a train to the London-bridge station, and when passing through the fields near Rotherhithe, the accused, who was there shooting birds, fired in the direction of the train, and the shots struck the engine, which was behind, some of them wounding the prosecutor in the face, fortunately only slightly. Some one who was in the field at the time spoke to the accused, telling him what he had done, at which he seemed much surprised and sorry.

"Mr. Sleigh then called the prosecutor in the matter, the engine-driver, and also a witness named Payne, who had witnessed the transaction; and while the witness Payne was under examination,

"Mr. Commissioner Kerr expressed an opinion that this case ought not to be further proceeded with, as it was manifest that the injury was the result of accident.

"Mr. Sleigh, on the part of the prosecution, stated that his clients, the London and Brighton Railway Company, thought it necessary to prosecute, and on their behalf he was consequently desirous of having the opinion of the jury upon it.

"Mr. Commissioner Kerr.—A British jury can do anything.

"Mr. Sleigh insisted that the case should be proceeded with.

"The witness Payne, who was under examination when this interlocutory discussion took place, then further deposed, that after seeing what had taken place, and that shots had struck the train, he followed the accused, and said to him, 'You have shot either the driver or the guard.' The accused replied, 'Oh! you do not say so,' and was visibly affected.

"Inspector Carpenter, of the police of the company, proved that when the train in question arrived in town the prosecutor told him what had occurred. At that time the prosecutor bore evident marks of a slight wound on the chin. The witness added that the point from which the shot had been fired was a distance of twenty-five yards from the point where it took effect.

"Mr. Commissioner Kerr again expressed an opinion that the case ought not to go to the jury. It was evident there was no intent on the part of the accused.

"Mr. Sleigh.—If he had killed a man under such circumstances, would not that be manslaughter?

"Mr. Commissioner Kerr.—No; it would be accident.

"After some further discussion between the learned counsel and the court,

"Mr. Commissioner Kerr told the jury that they had already heard his opinion on the matter, and he should give them no directions, but they might deal with the case as they liked.

"Mr. Sleigh suggested to the court that it was a point for the jury, that in fact, at the time of the occurrence, the prisoner was trespassing on the company's line.

"Mr. Commissioner Kerr.—Then bring your action for trespass.

"The jury then turned round in their box, and, after a consultation of about a quarter of an hour, returned a verdict of 'guilty' on the second count of the indictment, which charged the prisoner with a common assault.

"Mr. Sleigh said he was instructed by the company not to press for heavy punishment, their only object being to protect the public.

"Mr. Commissioner Kerr remarked that he should like to know, after the great flourish he had heard as to the motives of the company, whether they meant to bear the expenses of this prosecution.

"Mr. Sleigh replied that he had no answer to make on that point.

"Mr. Commissioner Kerr (addressing the prisoner) said the justice of the case would be met by fining him 20s., and in the propriety of that judgment he was fortified by the opinion of the worthy alderman (Phillips) who sat by his side."

If the above report of the case of Reg. v. Hayes is correct, the conduct of the learned judge who presided at the trial is open to grave animadversion. The accused is shewn to have fired a gun under circumstances when beyond all question he ought not to have fired it, namely, in the direction of a railway train, from which he was distant only about seventy-five feet, the effect of that firing being to wound the engine-driver in the face; and the sole question was, whether that injury was the result of accident or misconduct on the part of the accused. Before the examination of the first witness is concluded, the judge interposes with an opinion that the case ought not to be proceeded with, the injury being, as he said, the result of accident; to which the counsel for the prosecution intimates that the prosecutors were desirous of taking the opinion of the jury on that point; on which, according to the report, the judge interposes with the observation, "A British jury can do anything." If by this was meant that by the English law there is no limit to the power of a jury, never was a more gross misstatement of the law. A jury have only such power as the law allows them, and there are many things which they cannot legally do; as, for instance, convict a man without evidence, decide questions of law where there is no dispute about facts, &c. But it is far more probable that the above observation of the judge was meant as a sneer against the trial by jury, the more especially as, judging from his works, that mode of trial finds small favour from Mr. Kerr. In the third volume of his edition of Blackstone's Commentaries, p. 412, after citing the remark of Mr. Justice Blackstone—"Every new tribunal, erected for the decision of facts, without the intervention of a jury (whether composed of justices of the peace, commissioners of the revenue, judges of a court of conscience, or any other standing magistrates), is a step towards establishing aristocracy, the most oppressive of absolute governments"—Mr. Kerr designates it "an opinion which the learned author might not have held in the present day; for in the county courts a single judge determines all matters of fact, unless a jury is demanded by one of the parties, which is only done in about five cases in a thousand. (See the returns laid before Parliament, sess. 1855-6)." In answer to this, it may be remarked, that the immense majority of the cases tried in county courts are of so trivial a nature that it is far better they should be disposed of in a summary way, even at the risk of occasional misdecision. A court consisting of a single police magistrate is a very proper tribunal to try an ordinary case of assault, but a most improper one to determine a case of high treason. And although occasionally cases of some importance arise in county courts, it is to be observed that the County Court Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 70, is worded very insidiously, and apparently with the intention of bringing the jury system into disrepute. Having constituted the judge of the county court the tribunal for deciding matters of fact in general, it enacts, "it shall be lawful for the plaintiff or defendant to require a jury to be summoned;" thus putting the party who desires a jury in the odious position of telling the judge that he has no confidence in him—the judge who must preside, and direct the jury when summoned; and it is not surprising that few litigants like to put themselves in that position. Mark the different language of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 1, which, it may be as well to observe, was passed three years before the publication of Mr. Kerr's book. This act retains the trial by judge and jury as the ordinary mode of trial, but enacts, "the parties to any cause may, by consent in writing, &c., leave the decision of any issue of fact to the court, &c., provided that the court or a judge shall, in their discretion, think fit to allow such trial;" and it is found in practice that the number of litigants who avail themselves of this boon is very small indeed.

If we are right in our conjecture as to his meaning, Mr. Commissioner Kerr should understand, that although as a man he is entitled to hold what opinions he pleases, as a judge he is bound to respect the law, which he has taken an oath to administer. Mr. Kerr has a right in his heart to dislike and despise the trial by jury, and to believe that justice would be better administered if the decision of all questions, both of law and fact, were determined by a single judge—a matter on which (at least, so far as regards criminal cases) most Englishmen, and, we believe, most Scotchmen too, are against him, and the case of Reg. v. Hayes is not likely to remove, however it may add to, their prejudices on that subject—but while sitting in judgment it is his duty to uphold and enforce the law, not to sneer at it. Notwithstanding that sneer, however, the counsel for the prosecution insists on the case proceeding; another witness is examined, when the judge again interposes with an opinion that the case ought not to go to the jury, it being evident, as he said, that there was no intent on the part of the accused—just as if intent was an indispensable element in the crime of manslaughter; and he finally charges the jury by telling them that they had heard his opinion on the matter, and he should give them no direction, but (repeating apparently the notion he had previously expressed) "they might deal with it as they pleased." Mr. Kerr has evidently a great deal of his duty to learn. He should first have heard the whole of the case for the prosecution, and at the end of it decided, as matter of law, whether, taking all the evidence to be true, there was any case for the jury; and if he held that there was not, he should have told them, ex cathedra, that they were bound by law to acquit the accused. But if, on the contrary, he held that there was a case to go to the jury—viz. was the act charged in the indictment done by the accused, and if so, was it done maliciously or carelessly, or was it caused by accident—he ought to have put those questions to them, with such comments and observations as he might deem proper to lead them to a just conclusion—not tell them in direct terms that it was "his opinion" that the whole affair was an accident, thus illegally invading the province of the jury.

The jury asserted their independence by considering the case, and forming upon it a judgment of their own; and the proceedings will, we trust, prove a warning to persons of Mr. Hayes's school, and teach them that, while pursuing their own amusements, the law (to say nothing of morality or humanity) requires that they pay a due regard to the safety and lives of others.

One word upon the question raised by the counsel for the prosecution, whether, if in this case the injured party had died, the accused would have been guilty of manslaughter, together with the answer of the judge, that it would have been death by accident. Assuming that the shooting by the defendant was in so a lawful act under the circumstances (which seems doubtful, if at the time he was a trespasser on the property of a railway company), the law on the subject is thus laid down in the last edition of Roscoe's Criminal Evidence, pp. 681, 682:—

"Where death is occasioned by the hand of a party engaged in the performance of a lawful act, it may amount either to murder, manslaughter, or mere misadventure, according to the circumstances by which it is accompanied. The most usual illustration of this doctrine is the instance of workmen throwing stones and rubbish from a house in the ordinary course of their business, by which a person underneath happens to be killed. If they deliberately saw the danger, or betrayed any consciousness of it, whence a general malignity of heart might be inferred, and yet gave no warning, it will be murder, on account of the gross impropriety of the act. If they did not look out, or not till it was too late, and there was even a small probability of persons passing by, it will be manslaughter. But if it had been in a retired place, where there was no probability of persons passing by, and none had been seen about the spot before, it seems to be no more than accidental death. For though the act itself might breed danger, yet the degree of caution requisite being only in proportion to the apparent necessity of it, and there being no apparent call for it in the instance put, the rule applies, 'De non existentibus et non apparentibus eadem est ratio.' So, if any person had been before seen on the spot, but due warning were given, it will be only misadventure. On the other hand, in London and other populous towns, at a time of day when the streets are usually thronged, it would be manslaughter, notwithstanding the ordinary caution used on other occasions of giving warning; for in the hurry and noise of a crowded street few persons hear the warning, or sufficiently attend to it, however loud."

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—A portion of the judgment in the case of Harding v. Harding (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 906; 2 Giff. 597) is so obscurely derived that I should be glad if you could furnish me with some assistance towards accepting or rejecting it. The suit was an administration suit, and it was found that the widow of the testator in the cause was dowerable out of certain parts of his real estate. On the death of the widow it was ordered "that 845*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* should be raised . . . as the amount due to her for her dower<sup>a</sup> down to the day of her death." We then find it stated in a letter set out in the report, that the widow, previously to her death, had sold her dower, and it would seem that the Inland Revenue Office claimed from the purchaser payment of succession duty thereon. Mr. Trevor, of that office, writes, "The sale of the widow's dower since May, 1853†, falls under the last provision of the 15th section of the Succession Duty Act; and subsequently there is a succession of real property of the annual value of such dower, for which the usual account‡ should be delivered." No argument on the question of payment of this duty is reported, and the Vice-Chancellor's judgment is simply, "The succession duty is clearly payable on the dower."

The marriage of the testator probably occurred in 1833. My difficulty is to discover who was reckoned the "predecessor" in this case. I apprehend that if a widow, who had been married after the 1st January, 1834, acquired dower, her husband would in all cases be the predecessor; and I should think he would be the predecessor also in the case of marriage of earlier date, if he were seized at the time of marriage, or acquired by purchase for valuable consideration during marriage the lands out of which the widow was dowerable; but if the lands came to him by gift or descent during marriage, the donor or ancestor might be held to be the widow's predecessor. Now, if the husband be the predecessor, no duty is payable (sect. 18 of the act); and in the absence of any fact in the reports bearing on the question, I must conclude that some other person must, in the way pointed out above, have been held to be the predecessor.

If I am right in my view of the case, perhaps the learned reporter could supply additional facts to make the ground of the judgment intelligible.

I remain, sir,

Your obedient servant,

2, New-square, Oct. 28, 1861.

L. H. O.

[We think that our correspondent has misapprehended the point in the case, which is not surprising, as the facts are scarcely stated with sufficient fulness in either of the reports, and the plaintiff's solicitor himself seems to have mistaken the grounds of Mr. Trevor's claim. Whether the decision was right or not was probably, at the time it was pronounced, a matter of chance, because no one seems to have made any inquiry as to the origin of the husband's title to the land, upon which, as our correspondent points out, the liability to succession duty would depend. The material facts to be collected from the reports are these:—John Harding was married to Jane Harding in December, 1833. Upon his death in 1851, his widow, Jane Harding, became entitled to her dower, and as the Succession Duty Act did not come into operation until the 19th May, 1853, no duty could be payable upon the succession which happened in 1851. The estates out of which the widow was dowerable had been devised by John Harding to trustees for sale, who sold the estates in the widow's lifetime, with her concurrence, a value being put upon her dower, for which she had credit in the trustees' account with her. On the death of the widow in 1860 the value of the estates in the hands of the purchasers from the trustees became augmented by the value of the widow's dower, which then ceased. This was a succession happening by the widow's death, and the question was, whether duty was payable in respect of it? If the duty was payable, it would, under the circumstances, come out of the money paid for the purchase of the estates. The answer to the claim was remarkable—"The widow had sold her dower, and the purchase money had been brought into the account of her estate, and legacy duty had been paid on it!" Mr. Trevor seems to have understood this as a suggestion that the duty was not payable because the dower had been in fact extinguished in the widow's lifetime, and he conclusively replied, that as the extinction happened after the Succession Duty Act began to operate, it could not affect the question.

Undoubtedly there was a succession on the widow's death: the beneficial interest which constituted the succession—the value of the widow's dower—ceasing by her death, for the benefit of the successor. The successor, as the case stood, was the trustees representing the testator, and the testator must be considered as having been the original successor, although his succession was of such a nature that he could never personally enjoy it. The only question, therefore, that remains is, who was the predecessor? Now, if the estate devolved upon the husband by descent, dower, or settlement, it is plain that the ancestor, testator, and settlor was the predecessor, for he gave, in effect, an estate in dower to the widow, and an estate in fee, subject to the dower, to the husband. But if the husband purchased the estate he was the predecessor, and, being also the successor, the estate in his hands, or in the hands of his trustees, or of a purchaser from them, was not liable to duty. (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51, s. 12). The 18th section, to which our correspondent refers, has no bearing on the point. Under that section the widow's dower would have been exempted from succession duty if the estate had been purchased by the husband, and he had died after the 18th May, 1853. As, where the husband was married after the 1st January, 1834, his widow's dower is entirely in his power, it may be plausibly argued, as our correspondent suggests, that the husband should be considered as the predecessor, even though he derived the estate by gift or descent from another. But this is by no means clear. In Harding v. Harding there was no room for that argument; but no one seems to have thought it material to inquire from whom and for what consideration the husband derived the estates, although upon the result of that inquiry the liability to duty, and the rate of duty, if any was payable, would depend.]

NEW OFFICES UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1861.

THE Lord Chancellor has caused the following answer to be returned to a memorial presented to him by the Liverpool Law Society on the subject of the qualifications of persons to be appointed to the new offices created under the new Bankruptcy Act:—

"House of Lords, Oct. 7, 1861.

"Sir,—I am desired by the Lord Chancellor to acknowledge the receipt of the memorial from the Liverpool Law Society on the subject of new offices to be created under the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, and in reply to inform you that it is not the intention of his Lordship to make any new appointments under the said act until it shall become manifest that the present staff of the officers of the Bankruptcy Court is insufficient to perform adequately the duties imposed on them by the new act.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"RICHARD BETHELL, Prin. Sec.

JUDICIAL STATISTICS.

INSOLVENCY IN 1860.

WE take the following from The Law Times:—

The statistics of insolvency invite attention. These comprise the proceedings of the Insolvent Debtors Court in London and of the county courts. The jurisdiction of the London court comprises all imprisoned debtors who file petitions for relief under stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110—those detained in any gaol in Middlesex and Surrey, the city of London, and the borough of Southwark; while the cases of insolvents in any prison beyond those limits are referred to the county courts, whose judges have the same powers as the Insolvent Court in London.

In 1860 the cases of petitions by imprisoned debtors were 2820, of which 19 were filed by creditors. Of these, 820 were within the exclusive jurisdiction of the London court; 2000 were cases of insolvents imprisoned beyond those limits.

Of these insolvents, 134 were professional men; 23 officers of the army or navy; 91 clerks; 1634 traders; 15 lodging-house keepers; 52 shopmen; 222 agents; 69 manufacturers; 197 mechanics; 97 graziers, farmers, millers, &c.; and 286 belonging to other classes. In 1859 the number was 2765, shewing an increase of only 55 during last year.

The number of schedules filed was 2747, shewing the following amount of debts:—

100 l . and under 300 l .	759
300 l . " 500 l .	522
500 l . " 1000 l .	633
1000 l . " 3000 l .	444
3000 l . " 5000 l .	76
5000 l . and above	62

In more than half the cases the debts were less than 500*l*. One-fourth of the whole had been previously either insolvent or bankrupt; in fact, were persons who fail systematically, and live by running into debt, designing not to pay, and when credit is exhausted passing through the court. This is a class created by the folly of modern legislation, influenced by a false philanthropy. No less than 119 had been insolvent twice before; 24 three times, and 14 more than three times! Surely there ought to be some punishment for such roguery.

The results are thus tabulated:—

	Total.	Insol.	Ct.	Cy.	C.
Prisoners who appeared at the hearing	2716	833	1883
Petitions dismissed	75	9	66
Adjudication for discharge—
Forthwith	2170	624	1546
At 2 years and above 1 year from vesting order	25	6	19
1 year and above 1 month.	74	34	40
6 months " 3 months	188	74	114
3 months " 2 months	62	19	43
2 months " 1 month.	49	13	36
1 month and under	68	53	15

The number of estates realised was 248; the amount of dividend declared thereon 36,038*l*. 3*s*. 6*d*. Of these, 129 estates and 20,247*l*. dividend were within the jurisdiction of the London court; and 119 estates, with 15,790*l*. dividend, in the country.

The expenses were 3203*l*. in the London court, and 2910*l*. in the county courts, and the amount for dividend was 29,923*l*.

The scheduled debts were 535,612*l*., and of these 316,371*l*. were entitled to dividend. Each estate realised averaged 145*l*., and the expenses 24*l*., leaving 121*l*. as the amount to be divided.

This averaged 5*l*. 11*s*. per cent. on the scheduled debts, and 9*l*. 8*s*. on the debts entitled to dividend, and were at the following rates in the pound:—

Under 1 s .	86	5 s . and under 10 s .	17
1 s . and under 2 s . 6 d .	89	10 s . " 15 s .	3
2 s . 6 d . " 5 s .	45	15 s . " 20 s .	4
		20 s .	4

Compared with 1859, these results shew an increase of 52, or 21 per cent., on the number of estates realised, and of 4477*l*., or 12*l*. per cent., in the amount of dividend declared. The amount of scheduled debts exceeded those of the preceding year by 222*l*. 17*s*. 9*d*., or 41*l*. per cent.; but the amount for dividend was also in excess by 34*l*. per cent. The average realised by each estate was less by 16*l*., or 9*l*. per cent.; and the average amount of dividend was less by 2*l*. 17*s*. per cent.

We come now to the other branch of insolvency, the proceedings under the Protection Acts, which empower any trader and other debtors whose debts are less than 300*l*., on filing a petition and schedule of his debts, to obtain an order protecting him from arrest. The Insolvent Court has jurisdiction in all cases where the debtor resides within twenty miles of the General Post-office, and the county courts in all other cases.

The number of petitions filed under the Protection

Acts in 1860 was 3081, of which 1055, or 34 per cent., were in London, and 2026, or 65 per cent., in the county courts.

Of these petitions 70 were by professional men; 10 by officers in the army and navy; 94 by clerks; 2226 by traders; 14 by lodging-house keepers; 33 by shopmen; 59 by agents; 46 by manufacturers; 114 by mechanics; 74 by agriculturists; and 341 by other classes.

Compared with 1859 there was an increase of 261, or 8 per cent.

The scheduled debts are thus classified:—

Under 100 l.	542
100 l. and under 300 l.	2304
300 l. " 500 l.	94
500 l. " 1000 l.	99
1000 l. " 3000 l.	40
3000 l. " 5000 l.	8
5000 l. and above	3

Thus, in 95 per cent. of these cases the debts were under 500*l.*, "showing," says the registrar, "a much lower average than in cases of the petitioners under the Insolvency Acts." The number who had been before bankrupt or insolvent was 9 per cent.: 244 had been so once; 39 twice; and 6 three times.

The number of estates realised was 453; their total value 19,914*l.*; the expenses 5848*l.*; the scheduled debts 227,853*l.*, of which 152,078*l.* were for dividend. On this sum the amount for dividend was 8*l.* per cent. The rates in the pound of the dividends paid were—

Under 1 s.	250
1 s. and under 2 s. 6 d.	168

"The utility of such a work, if well done, is manifest. The law is presented in a shape fitted to be read and remembered, and the student will find it especially valuable. We regret that the many claims upon our space forbid indulgence in extract, but the reader will perhaps accept our assurance that the work has been very well done; the law is conveniently arranged for reference, and stated with singular clearness and precision."—Law Times, Feb. 23, 1861.

"A book like the present was really a desideratum. At all events, nowhere else can be found so clear and intelligible an account, in a substantive form, of the Trustee Acts of 1850 and 1852, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, Sir George Turner's Act, the Trustee Relief Acts, the Infants' Settlement and Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Acts, and other statutes under which the Court exercises its special jurisdiction."—Solicitors' Journal, Feb. 9, 1861.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 9, 1861.

IN continuation of an article in a former number (ante, p. 387), we proceed to call attention to various acts of Parliament passed during last session, which are either of considerable public importance, or useful to be borne in mind by lawyers in the ordinary routine of actual practice.

The first subject of legislation which we shall notice is that with reference to bequests of moveables, as affected by questions of domicile.

With regard to immoveable property, or realty, it is, as is well known, in general governed by the lex loci rei sitæ; and, in whatever country a will be executed, it must, both as to its form and mode of expression, be such as would pass land if it had been executed in this country.

With regard to moveable property, the lex domicilii prevailed; and therefore, if an Englishman died domiciled abroad, the succession to his moveables was governed by the place of his domicile; and if he made a will there, its validity depended upon its being executed according to the forms there required, and probate would not in this country be granted of such will, unless it appeared to be executed according to the lex domicilii; and if it were so executed, probate would be granted here, though it might be invalid as an English will. This state of the law, as affecting bequests of moveables, often gave rise to difficult questions, both with regard to the vexata questio of domicile, and also as to the law of the place of the domicile, when ascertained.

These difficulties will, to a great extent, if not entirely, be put an end to by two important acts. The first is the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, intitled "An Act to amend the Law with respect to Wills of Personal Estate made by British Subjects." It enacts, that every will and other testamentary instrument made out of the United Kingdom by a British subject (whatever may be the domicile of such person at the time of making the same, or at the time of his or her death) shall, as regards personal estate, be held to be well executed, for the purpose of being admitted in England and Ireland to probate, and in Scotland to confirmation, if the same be made according to the forms required either by the law of the place where the same was made, or by the law of the place where such person was domiciled when the same was made, or by the laws then in force in that part of her Majesty's dominions where he had his domicile of origin (sect. 1). Moreover, every will and other testamentary instrument made within the United Kingdom by any British subject (whatever may be the domicile of such person at the time of making the same, or at the time of his or her death) shall, as regards personal estate, be held to be well executed, and shall be admitted in England and Ireland to probate, and in Scotland to confirmation, if the same be executed according to the forms required by the laws for the time being in force in that part of the United Kingdom where the same is made (sect. 2); and change of domicile is not to invalidate a will (sect. 3). Nothing in the act contained is to invalidate any will or other testamentary instrument, as regards personal estate, which would have been valid if this act had not been passed, except as such will or other testamentary instrument may be revoked or altered by any subsequent will or testamentary instrument made valid by this act (sect. 4); and the act is only to extend to wills and other testamentary instruments made by persons who die after the passing of the act (sect. 5).

The next act upon the same subject is the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 121, which enacts, that whenever her Majesty shall, by convention with any foreign state, agree that the provisions therein contained shall be applicable to the subjects of her Majesty and of such foreign state respectively, it shall be lawful for her Majesty, by any Order in Council, to direct, and it is thereby enacted, that after the publication of such order in the Gazette, no British subject, resident at the time of his or her death in the foreign country named in such Order, shall be deemed, under any circumstances, to have acquired a domicile in such country, unless such British subject shall have been resident in such country for one year immediately preceding his or her decease, and shall also have made, and deposited in a public office of such foreign country (such office to be named in the Order in Council), a declaration in writing of his or her intention to become domiciled in such foreign country; and every British subject dying resident in such foreign country, but without having so resided and made such declaration as aforesaid, shall be deemed for all purposes of testate or intestate succession, as to moveables, to retain the domicile he or she possessed at the time of his or her going to reside in such foreign country as aforesaid (sect. 1).

After any such convention as aforesaid shall have been entered into by her Majesty with any foreign state, it shall be lawful for her Majesty in Council to direct, and from and after the publication of such Order in the London Gazette it shall be and is thereby enacted, that no subject of any such foreign country, who at the time of his or her death shall be resident in any part of Great Britain or Ireland, shall be deemed, under any circumstances, to have acquired a domicile therein, unless such foreign subject shall have been resident within Great Britain or Ireland for one year immediately preceding his or her decease, and shall also have signed and deposited with her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department a declaration in writing of his or her desire to become and be domiciled in England, Scotland, or Ireland, and that the law of the place of such domicile shall regulate his or her moveable succession (sect. 2).

The act is not to apply to any foreigners who may have obtained letters of naturalisation (sect. 3).

After a convention has been entered into with any foreign state, and published in the Gazette, when the subjects of any such foreign state shall die in her Majesty's dominions, and there shall be no person to administer their estates, the consuls, vice-consuls, or consular agents of such foreign states may obtain letters of administration, limited in such manner and for such times as to the court shall seem meet (sect. 4).

An important act was passed for establishing High courts of judicature in India (24 & 25 Vict. c. 104), in lieu of the supreme courts and sudder courts in the different presidencies; not less than one-third of the judges of such courts are to be barristers of not less than five years' standing, the rest being judges or pleaders of a certain standing in Indian courts.

Much has been done by the Legislature to prevent the unnecessary profusion of oaths formerly required upon the most trivial occasions. An act has been passed this session which certainly goes a considerable step towards the abolition of oaths altogether. By the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 66, a person, independently of his belonging to any particular sect (such as the Quakers, whose tender consciences with regard to oaths have long since been indulged with immunity from taking them), by affirming that the taking of any oath is, according to his religious belief, unlawful, may thereupon make a solemn affirmation and declaration (sect. 1), the punishment for making a false affirmation being the same as that for perjury (sect. 2).

The act to amend the law relating to conjugal rights in Scotland (24 & 25 Vict. c. 86), amongst other provisions, contains some clauses giving a wife deserted by her husband power to apply for an order to protect property which she has acquired or may acquire by her own industry, or which she may succeed to, subsequent to such desertion (sects. 1-5). The application, however, can only be made to a Lord Ordinary of the Court of Session, or to the Lord Ordinary on the Rolls, by a mode of procedure which appears to be very cumbersome—very inferior to the clauses of Lord St. Leonards in the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, which we have lately had occasion to comment upon as being themselves susceptible of considerable improvement.

The limitation of suits by the Crown, by the 9 Geo. 3, c. 18, was in consequence of certain provisions contained therein not carried out to the extent which justice and equity to the subjects of the Crown demanded. The shortcomings of that act have in a great degree been remedied by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 62, which provides, that the Crown is not to sue after sixty years, by reason of lands or hereditaments (other than liberties and franchises) having been in charge to the Crown, or stood insuper of record, within the said space of sixty years (sect. 1). The provisions of the act are to apply to actions by the Duke of Cornwall (sect. 2). There are provisions also as to the answering of rent to the Crown (sect. 3), and preserving the right of the Crown to reversionary interests (sect. 4); and the act is not to apply to existing suits (sect. 5).

The inconvenience of the present mode of rotting at the elections of members of Parliament has often been felt. Stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 53, introduces a novelty in our system of voting. It enables the electors of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin, in lieu of attending personally at elections, to vote at elections for members to serve in Parliament for those Universities by means of voting papers. Although the electors of the Universities, in consequence of the non-residence of the greater number of them, have a peculiar claim to have an alteration in their favour of the old mode of voting, still, if the mode of voting by means of papers be found to work well in the Universities, it might, perhaps, be safely extended to other constituencies.

The act to amend the law relating to the drainage of land for agricultural purposes (24 & 25 Vict. c. 123) is confined to England, and does not extend to Scotland, Ireland, or to the metropolis, as defined by the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. The provisions of the act, which are of great importance, will be carried into effect by means of commissions of sewers issued for certain areas, on the recommendation of the Inclosure Commissioners (sect. 4), to be obtained on the petition of the proprietors, after an investigation by an inspector (sect. 5).

Few sessions, it has been said, are without a Salmon Fishery Bill. Last session produced a very important one (24 & 25 Vict. c. 109); it repeals a great variety of acts, commencing with the 13 Edw. 1, stat. 1, c. 47. The act prohibits certain modes of destroying fish (sects. 5-16); lays restrictions as to the time of fishing (sects. 17-23); makes provisions as to fish passes (sects. 23-26); and places very wholesome restrictions upon fishing weirs, by providing for and enforcing the construction therein of free gaps or openings (sects. 27, 28), and laying down rules as to the construction of boxes and cribs (sect. 29), and spur walls (sect. 30), in fishing weirs and fishing mill dams.

The general superintendence of fisheries is vested in the Home Office, with power to appoint two inspectors (sect. 31), annual reports from whom are to be laid before Parliament (sect. 32).

Conservators or overseers for the preservation of salmon may be appointed by justices at sessions (sect. 33); and any justice of the peace may grant a warrant, on probable cause to suspect a breach of the provisions of the act, to enter suspected places (sect. 34). Provisions are then made for the recovery of penalties (sect. 35), and as to the counties or districts where offences are to be tried (sects. 36, 37).

On the whole, we think that the statutes of last session are far above the usual average with regard to their public utility; and the beginning which has actually been made in the revision of the statute law, by the repeal of obsolete acts, leads us to hope that the time is not far distant when the whole of the public general statutes may be comprised in a few volumes.

The Criminal-law Consolidation Statutes of the 24 & 25 Vict. cc. 94 to 190. Edited, with Notes, Critical and Explanatory, by JAMES EDWARD DAVIA, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

[London: Butterworths. Hodges, Smith, & Co., Dublin. 1861.]

THIS work is one of a class almost indispensable to every practitioner, in the existing state of the law. The great changes effected by the Criminal-law Consolidation Statutes render imperfect every existing treatise on criminal law, and necessitate a careful study of the new enactments, either from their text alone, or in conjunction with such assistance as is afforded by treatises like the present. The utility of works of this nature being indisputable, the only question, when one presents itself, is to see in what manner the author has fulfilled his task.

We can speak favourably of the labours of Mr. Davis. The book opens with an introduction, in which the general design of the seven acts constituting the subject of it is fully discussed, the necessity for some enactments of the kind clearly shewn, and the advantages and deficiencies of those in question fairly considered. On the first of these subjects Mr. Davis remarks—

“The gradual contraction of capital punishments, and the substitution of transportation for life, and—as a necessary consequence for the preservation of a due distinction in the enormity of offences—a corresponding reduction of offences, previously punishable with transportation for life, to transportation for a term of years; the abolition of transportation for simple larceny and offences punishable as simple larceny; the introduction of penal servitude; and, lastly, the cessation of transportation altogether; had so complicated the statute law that it was a work of considerable difficulty in many cases to ascertain the existing limits of punishment for each offence.

“The crime of horse-stealing may be taken as a fair illustration, and by no means the most complicated. What is the punishment for horse-stealing at this moment—that is to say, before the new acts come into operation? Answer.—Penal servitude for not more than fifteen or not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. Question.—How is that shewn? Answer.—The 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, enacts, that if any person shall steal any horse he shall suffer death as a felon. By the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 62, the punishment of death was abolished, and transportation for life was substituted, for this and other offences. By the 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 7, so much of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 62, as related to the punishment of persons convicted of offences for which they were liable under that act to be transported for life, was repealed, and transportation for fifteen or not less than ten years, or imprisonment not exceeding three years, was substituted. Then the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 24, s. 1, enacted, that in all cases where the court was empowered or required to award a sentence of transportation exceeding seven years, it should be lawful to award a sentence of transportation for not less than seven years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. Then, by the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, transportation for not less than fourteen years was abolished, and certain sentences of penal servitude authorised instead. Those provisions, however, were repealed by the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 1, which abolished transportation, and substituted penal servitude for the same term of years, with a proviso, that in any case in which sentence of seven years' transportation might have been passed, it should be lawful for the court, in its discretion, to pass a sentence of penal servitude of not less than three years. As this proviso applied to horse-stealing, in consequence of the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 24, it follows that the punishment for horse-stealing is penal servitude not exceeding fifteen and not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years.—Q. E. D.

“To get rid of this long story, by placing the proper sentence in juxtaposition with the particular offence, is no slight benefit conferred by the new statutes, and is, in fact, one of their two leading features, the other being the consolidation and assimilation of the laws for Ireland with those of England, of which both countries will reap the advantage.”

As to the latter (pp. xi, xii)—

“The general reduction in the scale of punishment for certain classes of offence, leaving others in their previous state, causes some apparent paradoxes in the law. Thus, if three men agree to murder a game-keeper, and make arrangements for that purpose, and even lie in wait for him in his master's woods at night, with fire-arms, and are then discovered and apprehended, their offence is less in the eye of the law than if they went to the same spot for the purpose of killing rabbits, armed with offensive weapons, and ran away the moment the keeper approached. The extreme punishment for the former offence as a conspiracy to murder is, under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 4, ten years' penal servitude; for the latter, as constituting night poaching, fourteen years' penal servitude may be imposed<sup>o</sup>."

"It is due also to the draftsman to state that efforts have been made to establish a systematic classification—one of the great stumbling-blocks in legislative as well as natural science. This has led in one instance to the separation, into different statutes, of the same offence, arising from different motives. By the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 6, the wilfully and maliciously placing wood or stones on railways, or displacing rails or turning-points, with intent to obstruct, upset, or destroy any engine, &c., or to endanger the safety of any person, was made a felony. The new Malicious Injuries Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 35, confines the offence to the former branch—the intent to obstruct the property; and then a corresponding section is introduced into the act relating to offences against the person (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 32) to meet the other intent. Still, as the overt act is the same, the two provisions must, for practical purposes, be considered together, and every indictment for a felonious obstruction ought to contain counts to meet either intent."

Coming to the body of the work, we find that it contains the seven acts for consolidating and amending the statutable criminal law which were passed at the end of the recent session of Parliament, viz. the 24 & 25 Vict. cc. 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100. These statutes, together with their marginal notes, are set out verbatim, while to each section a note is appended stating whether the provisions contained in it are new, and, if not, on what former enactments they are based; also whether the offences in it are triable at quarter sessions; and in many instances a summary of the pre-existing law on the subject, as established by decided cases. Perhaps this part of the work might have been enlarged with advantage.

Instances are also pointed out of important doubts likely to arise on particular sections. Thus, the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 51, enacts—

"Whoever shall enter the dwelling-house of another with intent to commit [any] felony [therein], or being in such dwelling-house shall commit any felony [therein], and shall in either case break out of the said dwelling-house in the night, shall be deemed guilty of burglary."

And the next section (the 52nd)—

"Whoever shall be convicted of the crime of burglary shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than three years; or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement."

* "It is right to state that the apparent anomaly in this particular instance does not originate, so far as England is concerned, with the recent statute, for hitherto conspiracy to murder has there been only a common-law misdemeanour. The statutable offence (capital in Ireland) has been now extended to England as a misdemeanour, and the punishment reduced as stated in the text."

In commenting on this latter section Mr. Davis remarks—

"The punishment for burglary remains the same as heretofore; but a question of some practical importance arises on this part of the act. The common-law offence of burglary—viz. the breaking and entering a dwelling-house in the night-time with intent to commit a felony—is not dealt with except for the purpose of stating the punishment; so that apparently all the ingredients of the offence remain untouched; and before the stat. 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 86, nice questions arose as to whether the offence was committed in the night-time, for if it were done after dawn, or in the twilight, when there was light enough to 'see a man's face,' the crime did not amount to burglary. The 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 86, s. 4, enacted, 'that, so far as the same is essential to the crime of burglary, the night shall be considered and is hereby declared to commence at nine of the clock in the evening of each day, and to conclude at six of the clock in the morning of the next succeeding day.' This statute is now repealed, and the only substitution for this provision is contained in the interpretation clause of the present act, that, 'for the purposes of this act, the night shall be deemed to commence at nine of the clock in the evening of each day, and to conclude at six of the clock in the morning of the next succeeding day.' The word 'night,' however, is not to be found in the act in reference to the common-law offence of burglary, but only in connexion with the statutable offence of breaking out of the house. It is therefore open to contention that the old law, as to what constitutes night, obtains in reference to the offence of breaking into a house. Perhaps the objection may be met by expanding the word 'burglary' to its legal definition of 'breaking into a house by night,' and so reading the section as including the word 'night.'"

It only remains to add, that between the body of the work and the Index are two useful tables, of which no notice is found in the title-page, namely—

1. "A Table of Indictable Offences under the new Criminal and Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Acts, with References to the present and former Acts, and the Punishment provided for each Offence."

2. "A Table of Summary Convictions under the new Criminal-law Consolidation Acts."

BOOKS RECEIVED.

A Treatise on the Criminal Law of the Navy, with an Introductory Chapter on the Early State and Discipline of the Navy; and an Appendix, comprising the Naval Discipline Act, the Queen's Regulations on Courts-martial and Discipline, and practical Forms. By Theodore Thring, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.—V. & R. Stevens & Sons. 1861.

The Criminal-law Consolidation Statutes of the 24 & 25 Vict. cc. 94–100. Edited, with Notes, Critical and Explanatory, by James Edward Davis, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.—Butterworths, London; Hodges, Smith, & Co., Dublin. 1861.

The new library of the Middle Temple was opened on Thursday, the 31st ult., by the Prince of Wales, with much form and pomp. Previous to the ceremony, a parliament of the Masters of the Bench was held, at which his Royal Highness was admitted a student of the Inn, was called to the outer Bar, and finally invited to the Bench.

GRAND JURIES.

At the last session of the Central Criminal Court, when the grand jury came into the court to be discharged, the foreman, addressing the Recorder, said he had a suggestion to make, with all respect to the court, by which he felt convinced the labours of grand juries would be much lightened, and more speedily and efficiently brought to a termination. He need scarcely remind his Lordship that the grand juries were generally men of business, and not acquainted with the technicalities of the law, and when, as in the case of one of the bills which he then presented, much time was taken up with long technicalities before they arrived at the precise charge, the jurors had the greatest difficulty in coming to their decision. The suggestion he had to make was, that each bill of that character should be accompanied by a summary of the precise charge, to enable them the more readily to understand the documents now presented in extenso. At the same time, the jurors begged to express their warmest thanks to the officers of the indictment office for the great and ready assistance they had rendered to them.

The Recorder said the suggestion was a very proper one, and should receive every attention in the proper quarter. After thanking them for their services, the learned Recorder discharged them from further attendance.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

In a recent charge to the grand jury at the Birmingham Quarter Sessions, the recorder, M. D. Hill, Esq., Q. C., said that a report had reached him from a neighbouring county to the effect that upon an investigation, case by case, of the large number of juvenile prisoners found in the gaols at the present time—and the gentlemen who made the inquiry were fully qualified, from their habits and position, though their minds revolted at the conclusion arrived at—the majority of the parents of the young prisoners were glad to find themselves, at this time of pressure, relieved from the expense of maintenance of their offspring, by knowing that they were in prison. The Reformatory Schools Act guarded against a similar temptation on the minds of parents whose children were sent to a reformatory, by requiring them to contribute to the support of their children. Although there were technical difficulties in working the act as passed at first, yet they had now been remedied; and the greater difficulty—the reluctance of magistrates to make the necessary orders—had also, to a large extent, been overcome, and he was of opinion the law was working well. It might not be proper in him to throw out the suggestion he was about to do at present, but he thought that while the parent was called upon to contribute to the support of his child in a reformatory school, he should also be called upon to contribute to his support in prison. The suggestion might be a new one, and one on which there might be diversity of opinion, but he felt sure that the subject would receive their candid attention: whether it would receive their approval was another matter.

COUNTY COURT CIRCUIT, No. 31.—H. R. Bagshawe Esq., Q. C., has been appointed judge of this circuit in lieu of John Johnes, Esq., resigned.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—Walter Morrison, Esq., for the borough of Plymouth, in the room of William Henry Edgecumbe (commonly called Viscount Valletort), now a Peer of the United Kingdom.

THE CONSOLIDATED CRIMINAL STATUTES OF ENGLAND AND IRELAND, passed in the last Session of Parliament, with Notes, Forms of Indictments, and Evidence.
 The Consolidated Criminal Statutes, passed in the last Session of Parliament, are of grave importance to all who administer or assist in administering the criminal justice of the country. The Judge, the magistrate, the barrister, the attorney—all must make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the criminal law as it is now declared or altered by these statutes, to enable them to perform the duties of their station with satisfaction to themselves or with benefit to the community. Besides very elaborate and explanatory notes, the volume contains forms of indictments for nearly every offence mentioned in it, with the evidence necessary to sustain them. To the magistrate at quarter sessions this will be invaluable, and in petty sessions also he will find it most useful, as it will apprise him of the evidence which will be necessary to convict the offender at quarter sessions or the assizes, so that he may insist on such evidence being produced, in order that he may include it in the examinations. The arrangement of the work will be found very much to simplify the many subjects of which it treats, and a programme prefixed to each statute will enable the reader at once to place his hand on any part of the subject he may wish to consult.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 16, 1861.

THE number of cases reserved this year by revising barristers for the decision of the Court of Common Pleas considerably exceeds the average, amounting in the whole to fifteen, seven of which proceed from the metropolis and metropolitan county. This excess of the latter is only what might have been expected from the newspaper reports of the proceedings in those courts during this autumn; and if we may trust to those reports, as well as to common fame, several very important, although apparently elementary, questions in registration law were there raised. Chief among these were sundry questions relative to the effect of notices of objection sent by post in the manner prescribed by the Registration of Voters Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, ss. 100, 101; one of which questions was, we believe, also reserved by the revising barrister of West Kent.

We do not regret the circumstance of this large number, and should be well contented if the same occurred every year. But to reserve a case for the Court of Common Pleas is not an easy matter. It cannot be reserved on questions of fact, or even on the admissibility or rejection of evidence, and must be confined to questions of law; while even there the trouble and expense are such as not unfrequently to induce parties to refuse "a case" spontaneously offered by the revising barrister. This is to be regretted, seeing that there are many unsettled points in registration law. Thus, it is the common opinion that overseers cannot withdraw objections made by them—an opinion which may possibly be a just one, but which is not founded on any legislative declaration, or established by decision of the court of appeal.

For our own part we cannot help thinking that it would be an improvement in the law if every person against whom a decision is given by a revising barrister had his appeal ex debito justitiæ—at least, on his giving security to the opposite party for costs incurred in the litigation.

And here we may observe, that the law respecting costs in revising barristers' courts seems not generally understood. In some places a notion prevails among voters, claimants, and objectors, that the successful party in those courts is entitled to recover his costs as matter of course. This notion is not an unnatural one, being apparently drawn from a supposed analogy to the ordinary practice of judicial tribunals, where the general rule is, "Victus victori in expensis condemnandus est." But the law is not so; the sole power of the revising barrister to award costs being derived from the 46th section of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, which enacts, "If in any case it shall appear to any revising barrister, holding any court, &c., that any person shall under this act have made, or attempted to sustain, any groundless or frivolous and vexatious claim or objection or title to have any name inserted or retained in any list of voters, it shall be lawful for the said barrister, in his discretion, to make such order as he shall think fit for the payment by such person of the costs, or of any part of the costs, of any person or persons in resisting such claim or objection or title, &c.: provided always, that the said sum so ordered to be paid by way of costs shall not in any case exceed the sum of 20s."

The truth seems to be, that the Legislature by which this statute was passed deemed the elective franchise a privilege of so high a nature that no man ought to grudge a little time and trouble, and perhaps even expense, to secure it; and that it is not until a man's franchise is "frivolously" or "vexatiously" attacked that he is entitled to any compensation. But this error is the less remarkable when we find that, short and precise as the above enactment is, it has occasionally been misunderstood by revising barristers. Some, we are informed, have laid down a rule "never" to allow costs to a new claimant on opposition to a successful new claim—a proposition in the very teeth of the statute, which renders the awarding costs discretionary with the revising barrister in the case of a frivolous or vexatious "claim or objection or title to have any name inserted or retained in any list of voters." Such a rule has an obvious tendency to encourage frivolous and vexatious objections.

It might also, perhaps, be worth the consideration of the Legislature whether objectors (other than overseers) ought to be allowed to withdraw their objections—at least, in the way they are allowed to do at present. There is every reason to believe, that in consequence of compromises effected by election agents in withdrawing objections to parties, many bad votes are to be found on most registers. The obvious remedy seems to be to make the withdrawing an objection prima facie evidence that it was "frivolous" or "vexatious;" but this would be rather a strong measure.

Upon the whole, looking at the number of cases reserved, and the points said to be involved in them, a useful addition to the body of registration law may be expected from the decisions of the Court of Common Pleas this year.

GENERAL ORDERS.

WHEREAS, by the General Order, No. 29, of the General Orders bearing date the 12th October, 1861, it is ordered that where adjudication of bankruptcy is made against a debtor on his own petition, or against a debtor in gaol without petition, the first meeting of creditors shall be holden on the fourteenth day after the day of such adjudication, unless such fourteenth day shall happen to be one of the days excepted by the 48th section, and in that case on the day after; but it is apprehended that the directions given by the said Order cannot be, in all cases, conveniently observed; now it is hereby ordered that the said General Order be and the same is hereby rescinded, and in lieu thereof it is ordered as follows:—

1. Where adjudication of bankruptcy is made against a debtor on his own petition, or against a debtor in gaol without petition, the first meeting of creditors shall be holden on the fourteenth day after the day of such adjudication, or on such other day as the court or the registrar making such adjudication shall think fit to appoint.

2. The following shall be the sums paid for the insertion of advertisements in the London Gazette, namely—

For every advertisement of adjudication, meeting, sitting, or other proceeding in any bankruptcy, except as hereinafter mentioned, the sum of 3s.

Where two or more bankruptcies are included in one advertisement, the sum of 2s. for each bankruptcy.

Where the adjudication of bankruptcy is made on the application of the debtor himself petitioning in forma pauperis, or by a registrar against a debtor in prison, the sum of 1s. for each bankruptcy.

3. Several notices may be included in one advertisement, which shall also contain notices of such meetings or sittings as the court or registrar may think fit, and may be in the following forms:—

BELLIGERENT RIGHTS AT SEA.

THE following letter, on subjects particularly deserving of attention at the present time, was addressed to J. Westlake, Esq., secretary of the International Law Department of the Association for the Advancement of Social Science, with the view of its being read at the recent meeting of the association at Dublin, but did not arrive in time. The writer is Mr. William Beach Lawrence, formerly Chargé d'Affaires of the United States at London; also editor of the last edition of Wheaton's International Law, and author of "The Law of Search." This gentleman must not, however, be confounded with Mr. Abbott Lawrence, recently ambassador to this country:—

"Ochre Point, Newport, R. I., July 28, 1861.

"My dear Sir,—When I looked on the programme of the International Department of your Association, I selected from the topics of discussion that of 'Rights of Belligerents over Private Property at Sea.' The position in which every American now finds himself, and which compels him to view all questions of public law not in their strictly international relations, but as connected with the existence of civil war, may well embarrass every attempt at free discussion. However any individual may endeavour to hold himself aloof from the popular excitement, and though he may not see in the alleged causes which divide his countrymen any apology for the sacrifices of blood and treasure to which the two sections are madly subjecting each other, it is not during a fratricidal strife that we are to look for any practical efforts towards carrying out the policy so happily inaugurated during your late war with Russia—making war a contest between State and State, and exempting, as far as practicable, from its evils, all the population not directly connected with the belligerent operations. Appreciating, as I do, the considerations which have led the governments of Europe to a declared neutrality in our pending domestic contest, as well as the advantage which the United States practically derive from a course which, instead of leaving their ports (as, without any violation of international obligations, they might have done) open to the prizes of both parties, excludes both, I shall, in any remarks that I may make on the proposed subject of discussion, endeavour to avoid all reference to the calamitous condition of our political affairs.

"So far had the idea been carried, that by the very existence of war the people of two nations become individually enemies, that all contracts between them were deemed to be ipso facto dissolved. So late as the war of 1812 it was for the first time, as far as my recollections extend, judicially expounded that a commercial partnership was thus terminated. The case was decided in the New York Court of Errors, the American commentator, Chancellor Kent, giving the controlling opinion. While both parties declared the right of a State to confiscate the private property of enemies found in the country, the only difference between the American and English courts was, that the former deemed a legislative act necessary for the purpose, while the seizing of all ships in port at the commencement of hostilities was regarded by the latter as a royal prerogative. The rule by which debts are suspended during the war, reviving at peace, was a modification of the right of confiscation in favour of the government, which is not only still theoretically claimed, but sometimes exercised, as by Denmark in 1807, in retaliation for vessels and other property condemned as droits of Admiralty. The early wars of the French Revolution, involved as they were with civil war, and the pretension of intervention on the part of the other European powers, were in their character exceptional. French publicists place in the same category with the confiscation of private property found in British ports the detention, on the rupture of the peace of Amiens, of individuals who had gone to the continent, before the commencement of the war, for purposes of pleasure or private business.

"The half century which had elapsed since the reconstruction of Europe by the Treaty of Vienna, while marked by the greater destructiveness imparted to the instruments of warfare, could scarcely have failed to effect some modifications in the belligerent code, if not as regards the subjects of the contending parties, at least in mitigating the inconveniences of war to those who, without any fault of their own, were made to suffer from the acts of others. In the wars of the French Revolution not only were neutrals exposed to all the embarrassments connected with 'visitation and search,' and subjected to capture under paper blockades of the two great belligerents, now universally admitted to have been in violation of international law; but, through licenses issued by both of them to an enormous extent, they conceded to one another an extended trade, not only with their European territories, but with the enemy's colonies, from which the British courts would have excluded those States, not engaged in the war, to whom, under municipal regulations, it had been denied in peace. The conflicting views previously held, in reference to neutrals, by the two great allies in the war against Russia, rendered necessary, at least, a temporary compromise of principle. Recurring to their former systems, it is very evident that if two nations situated like England and France—the one possessing the largest military marine in the world, the other having a navy only inferior to that of its ally—had, as co-belligerents, determined each to maintain its own peculiar views, neutral commerce would have altogether ceased. The property of a friend, which England would not have condemned for having been found in an enemy's vessel, would, as partaking of the character of the flag, been good prize to a French cruiser; while the neutral ship, whose flag would have been a protection against France, would have been subject to be searched by English officers for enemy's property—the mere suspicion of having it on board being sufficient to cause her to be sent into an English port. Not only was the severity of the old codes mitigated by the declarations of England and France that 'free ships make free goods,' or, in other words, that enemy's property laden on board of neutral ships should pass free, while neutral property in enemy's ships remained exempt from confiscation, contraband of war in both cases excepted, but the prohibition of the enemy's colonial and coasting trade, not open to neutrals in time of peace, known as the rule of 1756, was wholly superseded, and neutrals were allowed to trade to all parts and places, wheresoever situated, not in a state of blockade. Indeed, so far as colonies were concerned, the rule, in the case of Russia, was necessarily without application; and as England, whose colonial trade had previously been made free, almost simultaneously with the Order in Council of the 15th April, 1854, opened by act of Parliament her coasting trade to the ships of all friendly nations, the theory of the restriction in question, even as to her, could no longer have had any basis.

BARRY'S STATUTORY JURISDICTION IN CHANCERY, 1861.

Just published,

A TREATISE on the STATUTORY JURISDICTION of the COURT of CHANCERY. With Forms. By WILLIAM WHITTAKER BARRY, of Lincoln's-inn, Esq., Barrister at Law. 1 vol. 8vo. 1861. Price 15s. cloth.

"The utility of such a work, if well done, is manifest. The law is presented in a shape fitted to be read and remembered, and the student will find it especially valuable. We regret that the many claims upon our space forbid indulgence in extract, but the reader will perhaps accept our assurance that the work has been very well done: the law is conveniently arranged for reference, and stated with singular clearness and precision."—Law Times, Feb. 23, 1861.

"A book like the present was really a desideratum. At all events, nowhere else can be found so clear and intelligible an account, in a substantive form, of the Trustee Acts of 1850 and 1852, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, Sir George Turner's Act, the Trustee Relief Acts, the Infants' Settlement and Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Acts, and other statutes under which the Court exercises its special jurisdiction."—Solicitors' Journal, Feb. 9, 1861.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 23, 1861.

WHEN Mr. Edwin James, Q. C., was disbarred by the Benchers of the Inner Temple on the 18th July last (having previously resigned his seat as member for Marylebone, and his office as recorder of Brighton), we duly notified that fact, and also his notice of intention to appeal to the judges against the decision of the Benchers (ante, p. 289); and in a subsequent number (ante, p. 315) we made some remarks on the secrecy observed in the matter, and expressed our surprise that, when so strong an act of authority was exercised, no information as to the grounds on which it was based was given to the public, or even to the Profession.

The latest news from America confirms us in the views expressed on that occasion. It now appears that Mr. James has been admitted to practise as a barrister in America, and this is announced by The New York Times in the following terms:—

“In the Supreme Court yesterday afternoon (Justices Clarke, Sutherland, and Barnard presiding) the distinguished British member of Parliament and Queen's counsel, Mr. Edwin James, was admitted to the New York bar. It is understood that he intends to make this city his home, and that he will enter at once upon the practice of the profession in which he has won such conspicuous honours abroad. In spite of the barriers that oppose the progress of mere talent, however great, to high success in England, Mr. James had achieved, without the slightest aid from aristocratic connexions, the very high distinction of standing among the foremost members of the British bar. Since the elevation of Sir Frederick Thesiger to the Chancellorship, and that of Sir Alexander Cockburn to the Chief Justiceship of the Queen's Bench, he has been almost without a rival in some branches of the Profession. As a parliamentary counsel, even previous to their elevation, he held the highest position. No member or petitioner believed his chances secure until Mr. James had been retained; and the statute-book of England is indebted to him for the new Bankruptcy Act, and many of the wisest measures which have marked the course of legal reform in the past few years. In all the ‘causes célèbres’ which have awakened interest here he has figured as leading counsel either for the prosecution or defence. The conduct of the case against Palmer, in the celebrated Rugeley poisoning, was committed to him. In the prosecution of Bernard for conspiracy against the life of Louis Napoleon he led for the defence, and his eloquent vindication is almost as familiar among us as it is over Europe. But recently, in the case of Colonel Dickson v. The Earl of Wilton, he did battle for the soldier's rights and honour against the whole power of the Court and the Horse Guards, and obtained a verdict of 20,000 dollars. As a statesman, representing Marylebone, the largest and wealthiest constituency in England, he has been the unvarying advocate of every measure calculated to enlarge the liberties, unchain the industry, and advance the freedom of the people. His parliamentary career has been chiefly made remarkable by his advocacy of Italian unity and liberty, of which in the House he was regarded as the special champion, and into which cause he threw himself with the most eager enthusiasm. At the end of the session of 1860 he hurried off to Italy, and, after passing some time with Count Cavour at his country seat near Turin, was despatched by him in a Piedmontese frigate to join Garibaldi, by whose side he remained as counsellor and companion during the glorious campaign of Italian freedom. He took part in the battles of Caprea and Volturino, and accompanied Garibaldi alone in his carriage on his triumphal entry into Naples. Nor was it least due to his wise and friendly counsels that Garibaldi was saved from pursuing that mad course into which he was urged by wild theorists, and which at one time threatened to jeopardise all he had gained for Italy. On his return to the House of Commons he was known as the friend and vindicator of Garibaldi, and in upholding his views in the great debate on Italian affairs in February last, in the House of Commons, closed an address of remarkable power in these striking and eloquent words:—‘The religion which Bossuet and Fénelon illustrated and adorned will endure for ages, but the temporal power of St. Peter is irrevocably doomed. In the exercise of the temporal power all that is good and holy is destroyed; every priest becomes a spy, and every bishop a policeman.’ In person and in manner Mr. James is an excellent specimen of the hale and hearty Englishman. He is a far more fluent and impressive speaker than most of the leading English orators, and has none of that half-stammering hesitation which to an American ear so sadly mars their best and most striking efforts. He is still in the prime of life, of laborious industry, eminently adroit and able in his management, especially of criminal cases, and quite able to hold his own against the consummate masters of law with whom he will come in contact among us. He will find them generous as well as formidable competitors for the high prizes of the Profession.”

Without pausing to dwell on the mass of misstatement, exaggeration, and rhodomontade contained in this article, we will confine ourselves to the fact which it announces, and to the position of affairs to which it gives rise. Mr. James, a Queen’s counsel, in a most eminent position at the English bar, is disbarred by his Inn of Court for causes not disclosed, but to which rumour attributes, and most probably with truth, a character much graver than the pecuniary embarrassments in which he was notoriously involved. He leaves this country, and establishes himself in America, where he is admitted a member of the bar, apparently without having undergone any course of studentship or preparation. There may, indeed, be nothing remarkable in this, for it is possible that, by the practice of the Supreme Court of New York, either no such probation is required, or an English barrister is entitled to be admitted to the bar in the same way as a graduate of one of our universities is entitled to his “ad eundem” in another. But it is hardly conceivable that the American Court which thus admitted Mr. James was ignorant of the fact of his having been disbarred in England, and almost equally inconceivable that they would have admitted him without a rigid inquiry into the circumstances which caused him to be disbarred; nor can we doubt that, if they made application for that purpose to the Inner Temple, the necessary information would have been given to them, although withheld from his countrymen at home.

If these premises are correct, one of these two consequences inevitably follows—either that Mr. James has been disbarred without cause, or for some insufficient reason—conduct of which we do not believe the Benchers of the Inner Temple capable, but which, if they are, we forbear to characterise; or that the Supreme Court of New York is willing to receive at its bar a man, very able it is true, but who has been dismissed with disgrace from ours for conduct which may have been such as to taint his honour, or even honesty, as an advocate, or his character as a gentleman.

An answer to the simple question, “What was Mr. Edwin James disbarred for?” would solve the whole difficulty.

BELLIGERENT RIGHTS AT SEA.

“Nor were the benefits of the reforms in the old mode of warfare confined to neutrals. I have already alluded to the course of England in the preceding maritime wars of the present century, of seizing and condemning, as droits of Admiralty, vessels and other property found in her ports at the commencement of hostilities. In the late war ample time was allowed by all the belligerents to the merchant vessels of their enemies in their ports to quit them with their cargoes. A subsequent order not only authorised a neutral trade in neutral ships with the enemy’s ports, but it was allowed to be carried on by British subjects, provided neutral vessels were employed—the only restrictions on such trade being, that it should not extend to contraband, or articles to export which required a special permission, or to a violation of a blockade, and that British ships should not be permitted to enter a port in the occupation of the enemy. In these respects there was no important distinction between the ukases of Russia and the orders and decrees of England and France. Indeed, both as regards enemies and neutrals, except that the merchant vessels of a belligerent could not enter the ports of its enemy, the trade of the world was scarcely affected by the pending hostilities. The effect of the British Order in Council, and which was only of the same import with the corresponding French decree, was to leave the trade of England with neutrals, and even the indirect trade with Russia, in the same state as during the peace, so far as the law of the courts was concerned. By the Russian declaration, also, English and French goods, even though they belonged to subjects of those countries, were allowed to be imported under neutral flags, in accordance with the usual custom-house regulations. The doctrine of illegal trade with an enemy, to which theretofore the penalty of confiscation was attached, had thus no existence.

“Nor was the operation of these measures on the rights of neutrals unnoticed during the pendency of the war. They were, with a knowledge of their consequences, sustained in the British Parliament by the ministers of the day. Lord Clarendon early declared to the American minister in London, that, though professedly only temporary, the precedent could not be departed from in future wars. When at a later period complaint was made of the benefit accruing to Prussia from the indirect trade through her with Russia, it only led to an exposition, on the part of the President of the Board of Trade, of the effects of former attempts to crush commerce in time of war, shewing that ‘they had fostered immorality, fraud, and perjury.’

“The preceding reference has been made to the relaxations introduced during the Russian war into the relations of the belligerents with one another and towards neutrals, with a view to a proper appreciation of the action of the Congress of Paris. The obvious motive of the declaration of maritime principles was to extend and perpetuate that liberal policy which had to a great extent continued, during a period of war, the usual commercial intercourse of peace, confining to the State the evils incident to hostilities. It was, therefore, not requisite to make any further material changes in the practice of nations in order to attain the full accomplishment of that to which the 'declaration' would seem to have been directed—the entire separation from the producing classes of those whose appropriate functions are the business of war, and exempting the former from all the consequences incident to hostilities. The necessary result of this doctrine, in practice, would be the immunity of private property at sea as well as on land. So far as respects three of the articles of the 'declaration' there was no ambiguity. They were confirmatory of the principles acted on during the war. The rule that the neutral flag covers the enemy's goods, and that the goods of neutrals are not liable to capture under the enemy's flag, with the exception in both cases as to contraband, had, moreover, been, pending the war, made the subject of a convention between the United States and Russia; and as Spain and Mexico were with the United States, the only powers that did not give their assent to the entire declaration, it may not be irrelevant to notice that a treaty, to the same effect as the one with Russia, was concluded by the United States with Mexico, and that, according to the construction given by the Supreme Court to the subsisting treaty with Spain, its provisions on these points are equivalent. As was justly observed by the American Secretary of State, 'If there have been any disputes in regard to blockades, the uncertainty was about the facts, but not the law.' That in order to be binding they must be effective, whatever exceptional cases had existed in practice, was, at least, recognised in theory. The proposition for the abolition of privateering was a mistake, in confounding one of the means for the accomplishment of an object with the end to be attained. That the entire immunity of private property at sea would follow as a necessary consequence from the abolition of cruising by private owned vessels would seem to have been the impression of those who, long before the Congress of Paris, advocated that proposition. If that is not to be the case, the article is without object. It is fair, therefore, to presume that it was based on the supposition that, when there no longer exists a class of men to whom depredation on private property is the appropriate vocation, the right of capture of merchant ships, now exercised by the officers of the regular navy, must yield to the sentiments of an advanced civilisation. Consequently the addition which Mr. Marcy proposed to make to the privateer clause, viz. 'That the private property of the subjects or citizens of a belligerent on the high seas should be exempted from seizure by public armed vessels of the other belligerent, except it be contraband,' is a legitimate development of the true spirit of the 'declaration.'

"That the immunity of private property from all capture at sea has ever been deemed identical with the abolition of privateering, and the prohibition of letters of marque has always been sustained by arguments applicable to the general question, a reference to the writings of publicists who have discussed the subject, as well as to the language of treaties, will abundantly shew. The Abbé Mably, who is usually cited as the earliest author on public law who called attention to the matter, prefaces his condemnation of all captures of merchantmen, and of private property at sea, by inquiring why, when two nations go to war, they should interdict all reciprocal commerce, and declaring that the doing so is the remains of ancient barbarism. Galiani, though he speaks of the privateersman (armatore), does so only to oppose him to the military leader on land, in reference to the treatment of private property. It is sometimes supposed that Dr. Franklin and the King of Prussia were anticipated in their philosophical views by a convention, made as early as 1675, between Sweden and the United Provinces. I have found this treaty of commerce, which is based on the immunity of trade, in Dumont, as in the 'Actes, &c. de la paix de Nimègue.' It was concluded during the pendency of a war, and reciprocally stipulates, as a means of avoiding annoyance to merchantmen and other property at sea, for the withdrawal of vessels furnished with the commissions of the two powers, and prohibits their subjects from taking commissions from other States to the prejudice of their commerce. By the recitals in the treaty of peace two years afterwards, it appears the convention had never been practically observed.

It is often alleged, that inasmuch as it was scarcely possible that the United States and Prussia should be brought into hostile collision, the philanthropical provision inserted in the treaty of 1785 was merely one of those declarations in which speculative theorists might safely indulge. The sincerity of Dr. Franklin is best shewn by the earnestness with which he pressed on Mr. Oswald, the negotiator of the first British treaty with the United States, the introduction of a similar article. Nor is it a slight confirmation of the views that I have endeavoured to express, that the abolition of privateering, and the immunity of private property, have been treated as indissolubly connected; that though, in all his letters, he refers in terms merely to the former, both in the draft for the British treaty, and in the article of that with Prussia, the specific clause against granting commissions to private armed vessels is a corollary to the exemption, expressed in the broadest language, of private property from injury or destruction, and of persons employed in the various peaceable pursuits of life from all molestation or inconvenience. The first article of the French decree of 1792 proclaimed the immunity of private property at sea; the second the abolition of privateering; and the executive authority was requested to negotiate with foreign powers on this basis. The proposition was only responded to by the city of Hamburg. The negotiations instituted by the United States with the different governments of Europe in 1823-4, and which were ineffectually renewed some years later with England during my connexion with the mission to your country, though popularly regarded as connected with privateering, had for their object the entire abolition of private war on the ocean.

"In proposing a new rule of international law, which can only be binding by obtaining an universal assent, it is not to be supposed that it can be so framed as to promote special interests, or that any one nation is to derive benefit from it to the prejudice of another. Unless the government is entirely separated from the individuals of the nation, and war confined to the former, the effect of surrendering the right of granting commissions to private armed cruisers would be to place the commerce of the world at the mercy of the power having the greatest military marine. If the consequence of the 'declaration' was to be, to increase the maritime preponderance of Great Britain and France, without even benefiting the general cause of civilisation (as their public ships would retain the right of capturing private property, while the United States, with a superior mercantile revenue, but comparatively without a navy, would be divested of all means of retaliation), it could hardly have been supposed that the measure would receive the necessary sanction. Indeed, the protocol of the Congress expressly declares that it would not be obligatory on the signers to maintain the principle of the abolition of privateering against those Powers which did not accede to it.

"That the American amendment was necessary to give to the 'declaration' of Paris full effect was soon recognised by most of the European Governments, as I have reason to know from the perusal of the papers in the Department of State at Washington, which were placed at my disposition by the last Administration, with a view to the preparation of a second annotated edition of Wheaton's Elements. Among the minor maritime States there was a clear unanimity of sentiment, but they naturally awaited, before giving a formal reply, the answer of the Great Powers. The adhesion of Russia was promptly rendered. Prince Gortschakoff instructed, so early as September, 1856, the Russian Minister at Washington to communicate to Secretary Marcy a copy of his instructions to Baron Brurow. Their emphatic language induces me to insert an extract—'Your Excellency will have an opportunity, in Paris, of taking cognisance of Mr. Marcy's note, in which the American proposition is developed in that cautious and lucid manner which commands conviction. The Secretary of State does not argue the exclusive interests of the United States; his plea is put for the whole of mankind. It grows out of a generous thought, the embodiment of which rests upon arguments which admit of no reply. The attention of the Emperor has, in an eminent degree, been enlisted by the overtures of the American Cabinet. In his view of the question they deserve to be taken into serious consideration by the Powers which signed the Treaty of Paris. They would honour themselves should they, by a resolution taken in common, and proclaimed to the world, apply to private property on the seas the principle of inviolability which they have ever professed for it on land. They would crown the work of pacification which has called them together, and give it an additional guarantee of permanence. By order of the Emperor you are invited, Baron, to entertain this idea before the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and to apprise him forthwith, that should the American proposition become the subject of common deliberation among the Powers, it would receive a most decisive support at the hands of the representative of his Imperial Majesty. You are even authorised, Baron, to declare that our august master would be disposed to take the initiative of this question.' The American Minister at Paris was assured by Count Walewski, in November, 1856, that the French Government would agree to the 'declaration' as modified by us, though a formal assent was deferred with a view to consultation with the other parties to the Treaty of Paris. Prussia formally announced in May, 1857, to Mr. Cass, Secretary of State, who had replaced Mr. Marcy, that the Cabinet of Berlin gave its adhesion to the proposition made by the President of the United States to be added to the principles agreed on at Paris, declaring, at the same time, that 'if this proposition should become the subject of a collective deliberation, it can rely on the most marked support of Prussia, which earnestly desires that other States will unite in a determination, the benefits of which will apply to all nations.' Instructions had been given by President Buchanan to suspend negotiations, as was stated by Lord Palmerston in a debate in Parliament in July, 1857, before any official action was taken by the Government of Great Britain. Lord Palmerston, whatever changes his opinions may have undergone, had expressed himself favourably to the proposition at a public meeting in Liverpool; and we have, in the following despatch of Count Schreptovitch, a further evidence of the interest which Russia took in the establishment of the principle. 'I have,' he says, writing under date of November 3 (15), 1856, 'improved a favourable opportunity to converse with Lord Clarendon in relation to the condition which the Cabinet of Washington appends to its accession to the principles of maritime law embodied in the declaration of the 11th (16th) April, and have delivered to him a copy of your Excellency's despatch under date of the 1st September. The Premier, in answer to my communication, stated to me that her Majesty's Government recognised, as a principle, the equity of the amendment proposed by the American Government, and that he saw no objection to make it the subject of a joint deliberation. He, however, added, that in the examination of the details of the question, it might find itself under the necessity of stipulating for certain reservations, which would be submitted at the proper time and place to the judgment of the Powers that are called to discuss the matter.'

"Whether the withdrawal of the Marcy amendment by the late Administration arose from a belief that the United States could not, in any event, surrender 'a mode of maritime warfare' held by the then Secretary of State 'to be peculiarly adapted to their condition and pursuits, and essential to their defence upon the ocean,' or whether it was thought, as was intimated by President Buchanan to the New York Chamber of Commerce, that the right of blockade, even as defined in 'the declaration of Paris,' would render inoperative the promised advantages to the pacific commerce of belligerents, is a matter which in no wise affects the principles of this discussion. I likewise abstain from adverting to the policy, of which I know nothing except from rumour, of the present Cabinet of Washington, which, it is said, repudiates the acts of its immediate predecessors, without, however, reviving the proposition which four years ago had so nearly united the suffrages of Christendom.

JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—The first meeting of this society for the season took place at its rooms, 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, on Monday, the 18th November, Mr. C. ## THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 30, 1861.

ALTHOUGH some time must elapse before the meeting of Parliament, the curiosity of the legal world is beginning to be excited as to what branches of the law are to be selected for amendment by the Lord Chancellor. Much is expected from him, for he has promised much; and what he has already effected, while occupying the subordinate offices of Solicitor-General and Attorney-General, forms, of course, but a very minute instalment of those vast improvements in the structure and administration of the law which he appears some years ago to have mapped out for performance when he should reach the high position he now occupies. Moreover, he holds the Great Seal at a period favourable to any great undertaking in the amendment of the law; and he may feel assured that should his measures be only well conceived, they will meet with the support of the public and the favour of the Profession; and none the less so, that they may be extensive in their operation, and involve alterations from which such men as Lords Eldon, Reddendale, and Ellenborough, adhering rigidly to the maxim, "Stare super antiquas vias," would have recoiled with dread and dismay, preferring an accumulation of a tangled and ever-increasing mass of statutes and cases, rather than allow any attempt to be made to reduce the laws to lucid order, and to arrange them in such a manner that they might be comprehended by those who were expected to obey, and who, by a legal fiction, cannot even now plead their ignorance of them.

Much has been done by piecemeal legislation to alter and even improve the statute law here and there—we might almost say everywhere—not always by those who either fully understood what they undertook to amend; but, on the whole, since the passing of the Reform Bill, many good measures have been carried. Great, too, has been the accumulation of cases in our books of reports, and they are still increasing each year in greater numbers, in various series, regular and irregular, authorised and unauthorised.

The evil of this is becoming, nay has become, well nigh intolerable. To use a phrase of the Manchester school, is it not full time for us "to take stock"—to leave off for the present mere repairs and patchwork, and to endeavour, out of the ample materials we have in hand, to raise up a structure worthy of a great and civilised nation?

Other countries of kindred race, with the same, or nearly the same, difficulties to contend against, have already overcome them, and may point, with some degree of satisfaction and pride, to a consolidated statute book, comprised in two or three moderate-sized volumes. Many of the American States, northern and southern, and Canada, have done what we, thanks to the inefficiency of the defunct Statute-law Commission, have failed to do.

The work sketched out by Lord Bacon in his celebrated proposal to amend the laws of England still remains to be done. Will Lord Chancellor Westbury be bold enough to undertake it, or will he rest contented with simply treading in the footsteps of his predecessors, and continue to add to the bulk of our law, and though, perhaps, in some respects improving it, in others increasing its complicated network of doubts and difficulties?

We believe that the Lord Chancellor will adopt the bolder and wiser course, of avoiding mere piecemeal legislation, and that he will carry out those great and comprehensive measures of law reform which he has so long and so zealously advocated.

We are induced to think this not merely in consequence of the announcements he has so frequently made upon this subject, both in Parliament and elsewhere, but from the vigorous mode in which last session the important Criminal-law Consolidation Acts, the Bankruptcy Act, and the Statute-law Revision Act were carried through Parliament, at a time when that assembly was so fully occupied by political and financial affairs of a most important and distracting nature. We believe, moreover, that the vast majority of the nation is in favour of any well-considered measures, from which we might hope, in due time, to be able to simplify and consolidate, as well as to improve, our laws. It is not now as it was in the time of Sir Samuel Romilly, when the most obvious improvements met with the most determined opposition—when law lords could rest with an easy conscience, after having successfully resisted the attempt to repeal the most sanguinary laws, awarding the punishment of death for the most trifling offences, and could venture to assert that a measure subjecting the real property of deceased debtors to the payment of their simple contract debts would lead to the ruin of the landed proprietors of the realm. All this bigoted attachment to unreasonable and unjust laws has passed away, and a law reformer in the position of Lord Chancellor is not likely to meet with any serious opposition.

With regard to the particular subjects which may occupy the attention of the Lord Chancellor there is much speculation. Will the fusion of law and equity be carried out to any greater and what extent? Is land to be transferred with greater facility and with less expense than at present, and how is the difficult question as to the mode in which it is to be carried out to be solved? What is to be done with the Winding-up Acts? Is the scandalous spectacle to be continued of an estate being wound up in two different courts, bankruptcy and equity, at the same time? Might not equity jurisdiction to a limited extent be conferred upon county courts? If A. agrees to take a farm worth 50*l.* a year from B., why should the former not have a simple, expeditious, and cheap remedy in a county court? If a county court is intrusted with winding up the affairs and distributing the assets of a bankrupt, why should it not have power to distribute the assets of a deceased testator or intestate? Why should not county courts in certain cases have jurisdiction in cases of partnerships? Why should two small tradesmen, partners in a provincial town, who cannot agree to carry on business or wind it up amicably, be forced to apply to the High Court of Chancery for a dissolution and consequential relief? Might not county court judges be intrusted with such matters? These are important questions, and we are convinced that the jurisdiction of the local courts might be very materially increased, greatly to the benefit of litigants, who would be able to settle their disputes without the necessity of having recourse to the complicated apparatus essential to an approach to the expensive precincts of Lincoln's-inn or Westminster Hall. Here, again, the obstacle to all improvement in the administration of the law, by the extension of the jurisdiction of the local courts, is raised by the enormous bulk of our statute and case law, and of the very conflicting and daily varying character of the latter; and we are convinced that the most essential step to all improvement in the administration of justice in this country is the consolidation of the statute law, and the formation of a digest of our case law, by which it may be not only lessened in bulk, but reduced to order and a greater degree of certainty.

An able letter on the subject of law consolidation has been recently addressed to the Lord Chancellor by a retired Australian judge*, showing that the subject is a matter of interest even in these remote colonies. The learned judge, with whom in many respects we fully agree, has fallen into some errors, which, perhaps, a recent return to this country has not enabled him to correct. He says, for instance, "As there is a board of commissioners in existence for the consolidation of the statutes, it may be confidently expected that a new collection of enactments will be published, wherein no repealed acts will be inserted, and in which those in operation will be scientifically arranged." The learned judge does not appear to be aware that the Statute-law Commission has long since, with the unanimous approbation of Parliament and the public, ceased to exist, and that it is in consequence thereof, and of the work being placed in the hands of two industrious and able members of the Bar, Messrs. Wood and Reilly, that Parliament was enabled to pass the Statute-law Revision Act of last session; but whether those two gentlemen will be able, unassisted, to complete the work which the learned Australian judge expects from the defunct commission, may reasonably be doubted.

We have not now space to go into the plan of Sir John Dickinson for the digest of the case law, and the compilation of an institute of English law. We fully agree with him that it must be the work of many, and a work of time.

With regard to the composition of the board under whose superintendence the work is to be carried out, we must confess to feeling considerable doubt and hesitation as to its being likely to work well. He proposes that two judges should be induced to retire from the Bench on their full salaries, and with the rank of Privy Counsellors, and to associate themselves with several barristers of minute learning and extensive practice, as a board of commissioners, and that such board should compose a digest of some head of law much intersected by statute law—such as the law of evidence—to serve as a model for a digest of other branches of the law, to be composed by members of the legal profession employed by the board.

Now, judges, when induced to retire from the Bench, have generally arrived at that time of life when they prefer gentle ease to active exertion; and judges are not necessarily adepts in the art of legal composition. Moreover, barristers in extensive practice, even if willing to become members of the board, would not be very likely to allow the composition of the digest to interfere with the receipt of fees. Members of the legal profession, engaged to compose the corresponding specimens on other branches of the law, would have to wait until the arrival of the Greek kalends for the production of the work which is proposed as the model for their study and imitation.

None, however, know better than the Lord Chancellor the causes of the failure of the Statute-law Commission, and it is not probable that when he undertakes the same or similar tasks he will fall into the same errors which ruined the projects of one of his predecessors.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1861.

COMPOSITION AND INSPECTORSHIP DEEDS.

(Contributed by William Ambrose, Esq., Barrister at Law).

SERIOUS doubts having been expressed in various circles as to whether composition and inspectorship deeds are within the 192nd section of the above act, so as to be binding on creditors who do not execute, a few observations upon the subject may not be unacceptable to the Profession, especially as those doubts are not altogether without foundation.

By the enacting part of the 192nd section of the act in question it is provided, that "every deed or instrument made or entered into between a debtor and his creditors, or any of them, or a trustee on their behalf, relating to the debts or liabilities of the debtor, and his release therefrom, or the distribution, inspection, management, and winding up of his estate, or any of such matters, shall be as valid and effectual and binding on all the creditors of such debtor as if they were parties to and had duly executed the same," provided the conditions therein mentioned are observed. Now, looking at the language of the above section, no doubt could be entertained upon the question were it not for the construction which the Courts put upon the clauses of the act of 1849 relating to deeds of arrangement. By the 224th section of that act it was provided, that every deed or memorandum of arrangement "touching such trader's liabilities, and his release therefrom, and the distribution, inspection, conduct, management, and mode of winding up of his estate, or all or any of such matters," should, subject to the conditions thereafter mentioned, be as effectual &c. upon all the creditors who shall not have signed as if they had duly signed &c. Now, one would have thought the above language quite wide enough to include all deeds of arrangement, whether deeds of composition, inspectorship, or otherwise; and so it was held by the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of Talley v. Taylor (1 El. & Bl. 527). But that decision was reversed by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, which decided, "that a deed providing for the distribution of the estate and effects of the debtor as in bankruptcy was alone contemplated." (See 1 El. & Bl. 542, 543). A decision to the same effect was also given by the Court of Common Pleas in Drew v. Collins (6 Emh. 670); and these decisions have been uniformly followed in subsequent cases. Now, the language of the 192nd section of the recent act is so much stronger than that of the 224th section of the act of 1849, that if the cases which have been cited had been decided mainly on the language of the 224th section, there need have been little hesitation in arriving at the conclusion that the 192nd section of the recent act does include composition and inspectorship deeds. But what gives rise to doubts upon the question is, that the decisions above cited did not proceed so much upon the language of the 224th section itself, but upon the preceding and subsequent sections, from which it appeared, first, that compositions were expressly mentioned where intended to be referred to; and, secondly, that the 228th and 229th sections clearly contemplated an administration of the debtor's estate, by reserving to creditors their rights of lien and priority, and giving them the right to apply to the Court in any case of maladministration of the estate. The first ground upon which the decisions in question were based is not found in the recent act, for although composition deeds are expressly mentioned in the body of the 185th section, relating to change from bankruptcy to arrangement, yet as it is clear, from the heading to the group of clauses, of which the 192nd is the first, that composition and inspectorship deeds are intended to be included in some one or more of those clauses, and yet are not expressly mentioned in any one of them, it cannot be contended that in the recent act composition deeds are expressly mentioned where intended to be referred to. The circumstance that composition and inspectorship deeds are expressly mentioned in the grouping of the clauses in question has, indeed, been mentioned as an argument in favour of the view that those deeds are comprehended in the 192nd section; but much stress cannot be laid upon that circumstance, for the mention of composition and inspectorship deeds in the heading in question may be referred to the 194th section, under which they are beyond all doubt included. With reference, however, to the second and principal ground upon which the cases above cited proceeded, viz. that the 228th and 229th sections clearly contemplated an administration of the debtor's estate, it would appear that the sections of the recent act following the 192nd, and, indeed, the conditions specified in the 192nd section itself, are quite as strong to shew that an administration of the debtor's estate was intended as anything in the act of 1849. Thus, the fifth condition requires the value of "the property and credits of the debtor comprised in such deed" to be valued by the affidavit; and the seventh condition requires, that, "immediately on the execution thereof by the debtor, possession of all the property comprised therein, of which the debtor can give or order possession, shall be given to the trustees." Again: the 195th section would appear to contemplate that every such deed must comprise "estate or effects," for it is thereby provided that no such deed is to be registered unless it is stamped with the ad valorem duty upon "the estate and effects comprised therein." However, the principal doubt appears to arise upon the 197th section, whereby it is provided, that "from and after the registration of every such deed or instrument in manner aforesaid, the debtor, and creditors, and trustees, parties to such deed, or who have assented thereto or are bound thereby, shall, in all matters relating to the estate and effects of such debtor, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy, and shall respectively have the benefit of and be liable to all the provisions of this act, in the same or like manner as if the debtor had been adjudged a bankrupt, and the creditors had proved, and the trustees had been appointed creditors' assignees under such bankruptcy; and the existing or future trustees of any such deed or instrument, and the creditors under the same, shall, as between themselves respectively, and as between themselves and the debtor, and against third persons, have the same powers, rights, and remedies with respect to the debtor and his estate and effects, and the collection and recovery of the same, as are possessed or may be used or exercised by assignees or creditors with respect to the bankrupt, or his acts, estate, and effects in bankruptcy; and, except where the deed shall expressly provide otherwise, the Court shall determine all questions arising under the deed, according to the law and practice in bankruptcy, so far as they may be applicable, and shall have power to make and enforce all such orders as it would be authorised to do if the debtor in such deed had been adjudged bankrupt, and his estate were administered in bankruptcy"—provisions clearly indicating that that section, at all events, contemplated only a deed providing for the distribution of the debtor's effects. But, notwithstanding all these doubts, it is submitted that the 192nd section of the recent act will include composition and inspectorship deeds, and upon this ground, that the sections of the recent act following the 192nd, and apparently contemplating "distribution," will not have the same force in restricting the language of the 192nd section of the recent act as the sections of the act of 1849, preceding and following the 224th section, had in restricting the language of that section; for in the language of the 224th section of the act of 1849 there was much greater ambiguity than in the 192nd section of the recent act, it being a question whether the words "or all or any of such matters" applied to the whole of the sentence, "touching such trader's liabilities, and his release therefrom, and the distribution, inspection, and winding up" &c., or whether they applied only to the matters enumerated in the latter part of the sentence, commencing with the words, "and the distribution, inspection, and winding up" &c. (see the judgment of the Chief Justice in Tetley v. Taylor, above cited); and, there being such ambiguity, the subsequent sections were considered, and as those sections clearly contemplated distribution, the judges read the words "or all or any of such matters" as applying only to the latter part of the sentence, commencing "and the distribution, winding up" &c.; so that, as interpreted by them, the 224th section of the act of 1849 read just as the 192nd section of the new act would read, if instead of the word "or," in the sentence, "touching the debts and liabilities of the debtor, and his release therefrom, or the distribution, winding up" &c., the word "and" were substituted. But the introduction into the 192nd section of the recent act of the word "or" in the place where the word "and" stood in the act of 1849 makes the language of the recent act so strong, that, notwithstanding the conditions forming part of the 192nd section and the following sections, which clearly contemplate administration as in bankruptcy, the true conclusion seems to be, that distribution is not necessarily contemplated by the recent act, and that the conditions and sections alluded to, clearly contemplating distribution, must be confined to the cases in which they are applicable. That construction, although contended for by counsel in the cases upon the act of 1849 above cited, was not adopted, because, there being the ambiguity above indicated in the 224th section, the subsequent sections were made the key for determining that ambiguity, in such a way that the subsequent sections became quite consistent. As, however, there is no ambiguity whatever in the enacting part of the 192nd section of the recent act, and the whole difficulty is created by the fifth and seventh conditions to that section and the subsequent sections, the true rule of construction of the new act would appear to be, to give effect to the plain language of the enacting part of the 192nd section, and confine the conditions mentioned in that section, and the provisions of the subsequent sections, contemplating distribution, to cases in which distribution is applicable. In that way effect can be given to the whole act; whereas, if composition and inspectorship deeds were to be excluded from it, on the ground that subsequent parts of the act clearly contemplated "distribution," the plain language of the enacting part of the 192nd section must be treated as a dead letter. No doubt the new rules cannot be regarded as a part of the act for the purpose of construction; but in confirmation of the conclusions above arrived at, and as shewing the opinion of the Lord Chancellor and the commissioners who have signed those rules, upon the question under consideration, it may be remarked that the 19th rule gives a form of memorandum to be delivered by the solicitor for the purpose of facilitating the making of entries under sect. 193 (relating to deeds comprised in sect. 192), and that in such form the "title of deed, whether deed of assignment, composition, or inspectorship," is to be stated. A difficulty, no doubt, arises in determining, in the case of composition and inspectorship deeds, what is "the property comprised therein" upon which ad valorem duty will be payable. But it is submitted that such difficulty is no argument against the conclusion that composition and inspectorship deeds are comprised in the 192nd section; for, even assuming that they are not within that section, the difficulty would still remain; for if not within the 192nd section, they are at all events included in the 194th section, and therefore require registration, and as such must, under the 195th section, be stamped with an ad valorem duty, calculated upon "the sworn or certified value of the estate or effects comprised in, or to be collected or distributed under, such deed or instrument."

It is suggested, however, that in the case of a composition or inspectorship deed, the value of "the estate and effects comprised therein" must be ascertained by reference to the amount of the composition or debt (as the case may be) which the debtor may pay or secure to his creditors; and, as a matter of fact, it may be stated that several composition deeds so stamped have already been admitted to registration.

THE resignation of Sir Hugh Hill, one of the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, on the ground of ill health, so often prematurely announced, has, we regret to say, at length proved a reality; and, so far as we have been able to learn, his successor has not yet been appointed, although, as usual on such occasions, rumour with her thousand tongues is very busy on the matter.

The judicial career of Mr. Justice Hill has been bright, though short; and we believe we express the opinion of the entire Profession when we say that had his health remained intact, he would in the course of a few years have earned a place among the very greatest of British judges—among the illustrious few who appear from time to time the ornaments of our jurisprudence, and whose names, decisions, and even words are remembered to all ages. Even as it is, his reputation as a judge stands very high; but in order fully to comprehend his merit, we must consider the fearful enemy he had to struggle with in his health. For the last few terms it was a spectacle alike grand and painful to behold Mr. Justice Hill sitting in the Court of Queen's Bench. However great the severe personal ailments against which he was evidently struggling, the mens divini, the mind within, rose superior to all; his attention never swerved for one moment from the question before the Court; be that question what it might, he was fully prepared to grapple with it; and, with the greatest respect for the other members of that Court be it spoken, the thus afflicted man shone forth as its very life and soul.

Let us hope that the cheering reflection of having ably and zealously discharged his duty to the last, and not abandoned his post until driven to it by the dire hand of necessity, will for many long years

"Solace his age and sanctify his rest."

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1861.

At the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the Examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

1. James Richardson Pearless, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Pearless, of East Grinstead, Sussex.

2. Herbert Henry Cornish, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Cornish & Chilcott, of Tavistock, and Messrs. Rodd & Cornish, of Penzance.

3. Walter John Till, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Drummonds, Robinson, & Till, of Croydon.

4. Arthur Lindo, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Nethaneel Lindo, of London.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Pearless, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's-inn; to Mr. Cornish, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; to Mr. Till, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; and to Mr. Lindo, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

The Examiners have also certified that the following candidates, whose names are placed in alphabetical order, passed examinations which entitle them to commendation:—

Thomas Ferguson Ansell, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Ansell, of St. Helena, Lancashire, and Messrs. Walker & Smith, of Chester; Francis Ross Greatwood, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Alexander Waddington, of Usk, and Messrs. Thomas White & Sons, of London; William Frederick Gush, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Walters & Son, of London; and Robert Harding Milward, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Penn Allcock, of Birmingham, and Messrs. Fallows & Son, of London.

The Council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit.

The Examiners have further announced to the following candidates that their answers to the questions at the examination were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled them to prizes or certificates of merit if they had been under the age of twenty-six:—

1. John Holmes, aged thirty, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Crosley & Burn, of London.

2. Charles Henry Wiltshire, aged twenty-eight, who served his clerkship to Mr. George Edward Sharland, of Gravesend.

3. Thomas Edelston, aged thirty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Thomas Harris, of Preston.

The number of candidates examined in this term was 104; of these 92 were passed, and 12 postponed.

By order of the Council,

ROBERT MAUGHAM, Secretary.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 7, 1861.

THE Succession Duty Act cannot be regarded as a successful experiment either in taxation or in legislative expression. A tax on successions, varying inversely with the nearness of relationship between the successor and the person from whom he derives the succession, has been recommended by arguments that are more specious than sound. It is said that a person is more willing to pay a tax on his first coming into the enjoyment of property than he would be to answer the periodical demands of a tax-gatherer; and that a stranger in blood, or a remote relation to the late owner, may reasonably be taxed more severely than a near relation, because he had less reason to expect anything. But this is very rough justice even in theory, and in practice it often loses all semblance of equity. An illegitimate child pays 10l. per cent. on a succession from his father or mother, for no reason, unless it can be said, in the high Blackstonian style, that it was his folly to be born basely. The claims both of relations and of strangers are more frequently founded, both in real justice and in the estimation of the settlor, upon considerations quite secondary to those of consanguinity. A brother, upon whom all the paternal means have been lavished, and who alone of his family has prospered in life, owes at least an equal duty to his sisters, or his nephews and nieces, as to his own children. The tax is felt, and virtually paid, by the predecessor as much as by the successor, for it is so much taken from his disposable means; and when legacies are given duty free, the tax is paid, in form as well as in substance, by the relation who takes the residue. The profligate husband or spendthrift son pays nothing or little, while the poor dependent cousin or faithful clerk who is turned adrift pays at a high rate. "The tax," said the late Mr. Brodie, "has also another decided advantage, from its being taken out of property in transitu before the new owner comes into the actual enjoyment of it. It is levied at the precise time when he acquires his fortune, or an increase of it." This is equally fallacious. It is true of that class of legacies which may be regarded as windfalls, but it is untrue of the great mass of the property which is subject to succession or legacy duty. In all cases where the deceased was the head of a family, which he supported by his industry, or maintained at an expense exceeding the annual income of his permanent property, his death has not brought an increase of fortune, but the contrary; and in the majority of cases it may be said that the succession or legacy duty is levied on persons who have suffered a pecuniary loss by the occasion of it. In short, the scheme of appraising the affections, the duties, or the expectations of men, with a view to taxation, is impracticable; and the only true measure of liability to contribute to the expenses of civil government is the amount of pecuniary benefit derived under it—the scale of living and expenditure of the contributor.

Whenever a law is founded on arbitrary distinctions which are not in harmony with the nature of things, its machinery, however "well contrived, will certainly work with great friction and difficulty, and probably will break down at some point; and the Succession Duty Act, which has been drawn with more ability than felicity, is no exception to the rule. The main objection to it, and one which no amendment can remove, is, that its provisions are necessarily founded on a highly-refined and abstract notion, involving, in its application to practice, distinctions still more refined and abstract, difficult of comprehension by, if not absolutely unintelligible to, ordinary capacities. It is ever lurking as a snare for unwary trustees, and coming as an unwelcome surprise upon unconscious successors. The difficulties it presents to accomplished lawyers are neither few nor slight. The cases of In re Jenkinson (24 Beav. 64) and The Attorney-General v. Yelverton (30 L. J., Ex., 333) may be referred to in illustration of one of these difficulties. In The Attorney-General v. Yelverton the material facts were, that, W. Chambers being tenant for life, with remainder to his issue, with remainder to Miss Gulston and her issue, with remainder to W. F. Cowell in tail, a disentailing assurance was executed, and the estates were resettled, with remainder to W. F. Cowell in fee in the event of failure of issue of W. Chambers and of Miss Gulston; and W. F. Cowell charged the estate, when he should come into possession, with 20,000*l.* in favour of W. Chambers. W. Chambers settled this 20,000*l.* on two persons whom he had adopted as his children. It was held by the majority of the Court of Exchequer, against the opinion of Bramwell, B., that the adopted children were liable to pay duty on the 20,000*l.* when they became entitled to receive it, as on a succession from W. Chambers. The decision in Re Jenkinson was to the same effect. It was conceded on both sides, and was one of the points decided at the Rolls, that the original charge or contract to pay the money, being for valuable consideration, did not create a succession. The 17th section of the act made that clear:—"No policy of insurance on the life of any person shall create the relation of predecessor and mortgagor between the insurer and the insured, or between the insurer and any assignee of the insured; and no bond or contract made by any person bonâ fide for valuable consideration, for the payment of money or monies after the death of any other person, shall create the relation of predecessor and successor between the person making such bond or contract and the person to or with whom the same shall be made; but any disposition or devolution of the monies payable under such policy, &c., if otherwise such as in itself to create a succession within the provisions of this act, shall be deemed to confer a succession." In his comment on this clause, Mr. Thring adopted the construction which has been rejected by the Master of the Rolls and the majority of the Barons of the Exchequer, suggesting that, in the event of a settlement of the monies secured by a life policy on A. for life, with remainder to B. absolutely, A. would not be liable to pay duty. The Court of Exchequer, fearing probably the labyrinth of subtlety and contradiction into which a pursuit of the abstract notion of a succession would lead them, relied on the literal meaning of the words of the 2nd section, and, it is presumed (for the report does not say what rate of duty was held to be payable), considered that W. Chambers was the person from whom the succession was derived. The effect of the decision was, that W. F. Cowell paid succession duty on the full value of the estate (sect. 24), and the donee of the 20,000*l.* also paid duty on so much of that value as that sum represented. So that if the value of the estate had been only 20,000*l.*, duty to the amount of many hundreds would have been paid on a worthless succession. The dissenting judge relied on the 15th section of the act; but that is no answer to a literal construction, for it only provides that the assignee of a succession shall pay duty at the same rate at which it would have been payable if the original owner had become entitled, and the interest now in question was not originally a succession. The same answer may, perhaps, be given to the learned Baron's inquiry, "Was it meant that this interest should be worth more to keep than to sell—more to sell to one of kin to the vendor than to another?" If the alienation creates the succession, there is no more to be said. But some of the consequences of the decision are remarkable. The person in whose favour the reversionary charge was made in the first instance is exempt from duty by the express provisions of the 17th section; but on the literal construction of the 2nd section a purchaser for value from such first purchaser must pay duty as on a succession from him—at a rate regulated by the degree of kindred; so that if A., for value, charges his estate with 20,000*l.* in favour of B., and B. sells the charge to his son C. for value, and C. sells to a stranger D. for value, D. must pay duty at 1*l.* per cent.; but if the intermediate purchaser had been a stranger to B., the duty would have been 10*l.* per cent. By the same reasoning, the purchaser of a life policy from the insured must pay succession duty on the amount received on the policy. If this is the effect of the act, Mr. Trevor has in very many cases neglected the interests of her Majesty's Exchequer.

BELLIGERENT RIGHTS AT SEA.

"The restoration of the rule, sustained by the earlier writers, of restricting blockades to places actually besieged, was also connected by the Senate of Hamburg with their late proposition for the immunity of private property at sea. Such a measure is necessary to the perfection of a system which would confine war to military operations, and is demanded not more for the interest of the peaceable inhabitants of the belligerent state than of neutrals. 'The investment of a place by sea and land,' said Mr. Cass, in his instructions for concluding maritime conventions in 1859, 'with a view to its reduction, preventing it from receiving supplies of men and material for its defence, is a legitimate mode of prosecuting hostilities, which cannot be objected to so long as war is recognised as an arbiter of national disputes. But the blockade of a coast, or of commercial positions along it, without any regard to ulterior military operations, and with the real design of carrying on a war against trade, and, from its very nature, against the trade of peaceable and friendly powers, instead of a war against armed men, is a proceeding which it is difficult to reconcile with reason, or with the opinions of modern times.' In looking, however, to the practical bearing of this matter, it is proper to remember that there is little danger of the paper blockades of the early part of the present century, which professedly retaliated on neutrals the alleged violations by the respective belligerents of the principles of international law, being hereafter resorted to by European powers. The decisions of the English courts—and they were in accordance with those of the French tribunals—during the Russian war, were well calculated to put an end to all attempts to place under an interdict, by a Cabinet notification, the entire coast of an extensive territory. I refer particularly to the decision of Lord Kingsdown in The Francisca, where it is declared that the notice of a blockade cannot be more extensive than the blockade itself; that a belligerent cannot be allowed to proclaim that he has instituted a blockade of several ports of the enemy, when, in truth, he has only blockaded one; and that a neutral in such case is not liable to the penalties attending a breach of blockade for afterwards attempting to enter the port which is really blockaded. Moreover, since the peace, Sir Charles Napier, who must be an authority on such a subject, stated in the House of Commons that double or treble the whole British navy would not be sufficient to make such a blockade of all the ports of France as would conform with the requirements of the 'declaration.'

"In this connexion it may not be irrelevant to allude to the exception from immunity of contraband contained as well in Mr. Marcy's amendment as in the articles of the 'declaration' referring to the cargoes of neutrals and to neutral property in an enemy's vessel. If the principle of contraband is still to be maintained, it is not little to be regretted that in a solemn instrument, intended to settle the uncertainties of maritime law, it should have been left wholly undefined. On no point is there a greater diversity of opinion than with respect to the extent of its application. By the adoption of the rule, that a neutral flag protects enemy's goods, there is no longer any pretence for the existence of the right of search, unless as connected with contraband. Nor does there appear to be any advantage to the belligerent in the continuance of the rule of contraband commensurate with the injuries which it must inevitably cause to the neutral in the detention of his ship and the interruption to his trade, and from the collisions between neutrals and belligerents to which the exercise of the right of search must inevitably give rise. As destination to an enemy's port is an essential point in a question of contraband, in all cases where the rule is of any practical importance to a belligerent, the law of blockade, even though that right should be restricted to places actually besieged, would also intervene. I have already remarked, that unless the abolition of privateering had in view the immunity of private property, it was without object. Moreover, no new rule can stand the test of international morality unless it confers equal advantages and imposes equal obligations on all states, great and small. The immunity proffered must be a defence as well against the spoils of an enemy possessed of a great military marine, as of a State whose resources are confined to her mercantile navies. The article under consideration, in the terms of the 'declaration,' can only, like the denunciation of the slave trade by the Congress of Vienna, address itself to the consciences of the Powers. That matter required, to give it any practical effect, special conventional stipulations, followed by legislation; and though, by a gross misnomer, the term 'piracy' was applied to its infraction, the statute offence is distinguished from the crime of the same name under the law of nations, which was everywhere justiciable. The phrase 'La course est et demeure abolie,' Lord Colchester, in an early debate, remarked, had been rendered by an English writer on international law, 'cruising is and remains abolished.' That would, of course, extend to the immunity of merchant ships from public as well as private vessels of war, if it did not abolish maritime war altogether. Capturing private property at sea, without a commission from some authority, is piracy; but it is not necessary that a Government, in order to enjoy belligerent rights, should be formally recognised by any other Power; and among these rights is that of issuing letters of marque and reprisal. Whether any case is within the principle of the arrangement of Paris, every nation to which a vessel belongs must decide for itself, subject, of course, to complaint on the part of the other contracting parties; but no State can undertake to outlaw a cruiser of another Power, provided it has a commission from a de facto Government, for any infraction of the article against privateering.

"It is not to be presumed that the Congress of Paris undertook to determine the form to be given either to the military or naval organisation of the respective parties to the 'declaration.' What species of property shall be exposed to hostilities is a matter which comes home to the interests both of neutrals and belligerents, and it may be a subject for conventional regulation; but, so far as principle is concerned, it is certainly of little importance whether a war is conducted by vessels owned by individuals and chartered by the Government, or whether they have been originally constructed in the public yards. It is well known that at one period France was in the habit of making arrangements with corsairs of other countries, as well as her own, to carry on public wars. There is, it is believed, a clause in the contracts which the British Government has with its Transatlantic steamers for the conversion of them into vessels of war; and at this moment the Congress of the United States is deliberating on authorising the employment of merchant ships to enforce the measures of coercion now going on towards the seceded States, and the establishment of a volunteer navy, the commissions in which, like those of the volunteers on shore, are to be temporary, and confined to the immediate service. Can any one doubt their right, were the United States to become parties to the 'declaration,' of employing their volunteer navy for any purpose, even for the capture of private property, in which the public vessels of other nations might properly be engaged? It has been, I am aware, alleged as an objection practically applicable to privateers, that their officers are ordinarily of a less elevated class than those of ships of war, and that therefore there is danger of a greater abuse of their power of visitation. It is sufficient that the responsibility of a nation is as much pledged for the observance of the law of nations by the one as by the other species of force; nor is it to be forgotten that it is to public cruisers, and not to privateers, that the cruelties at different times inflicted by the destruction of the establishments of unarmed fishermen are to be ascribed.

"From what has been stated it may be inferred that the 'declaration' as to privateering, in its present form, so far from being operative, would only give rise to new complications and charges of evasion; while, if the reform was addressed to the immunity of private property in its extended sense, there would be nothing to interfere with its application. Though the proposition for exempting merchantmen from capture by public ships was withdrawn by the Government of the United States, it was revived in 1858 by another American State. Brazil proposed that 'all private property, without exception of merchant vessels, should be placed under the protection of maritime law, and be free from the attacks of cruisers of war.' The subject was subsequently, in consequence of the movements of the commerce of Hamburg and Bremen, greatly discussed by the publicists of Germany, and in the Chamber of Deputies of Prussia. Being in Germany at the time, I had an opportunity of appreciating the importance thus attached to it, even by those States which did not themselves possess a commercial marine, but whose manufactures, exported from Bremen and Hamburg, were subject to the dangers and embarrassments which attach to neutral property in time of war. Count Rechberg assured me, that though little of the Austrian commerce passed through their port of Trieste, yet that he placed such a value on the exports and imports to and from the United States and elsewhere through the Hanse Towns, that, should the subject come before an European Congress, it would receive his support. The publicists who have discussed this topic have in general sustained the cause of reform; but I have within a few months received a pamphlet of a contrary import ('Propriétés privées des sujets Belligérants') from M. Hautefeuille, the learned author of several treatises on maritime law. M. Hautefeuille has ever been opposed to the abolition of privateering, which measure he deems to have been brought forward in the interests of England, while he ascribes the proposal of the immunity of private property at sea to a profound American policy, which President Buchanan's attempted negotiations as to blockades would only have rendered more complete. He entirely mistakes the scope of the Marcy amendment, which was intended to conciliate, as far as practicable, the supposed demands of humanity with what was due to the safety of the United States. No one doubted that in acceding, even with the amendment, to the Paris 'declaration,' this country would be abandoning the most efficient of its belligerent resources. M. Hautefeuille's argument is based on noncontroversial what he deems the false assumption that private property on land was free from belligerent capture, and denying that its immunity, either at sea or on land, is demanded by any considerations of humanity. My time will not permit me to follow M. Hautefeuille in his elucidations. It may be remarked, as to his first point, that any inaccuracy of the advocates of exemption from capture at sea, with reference to the existing rule as to the land, can in no wise affect the principle, except to include, if he is correct, the latter in the proposed reform. The treaty, as our author fully admits, of 175 dollars between Prussia and the United States, in its explicit provisions, both as to sea and land, left nothing to be supplied in this respect. M. Hautefeuille contends that the evils of war are to be estimated by its duration, and that the more destructive its operations are, the more it is brought home to all classes of the community, the more is the cause of humanity promoted. Without derogating from the course of reasoning, illustrated by the short Italian campaign, with its bloody battles of Magenta and Solferino, it is to be noticed that the absence of commerce and the stagnation of affairs enumerated by him are among the consequences of war, which it is the object of the proposed plan, at least, to diminish. M. Hautefeuille's argument, taken in its fullest extent, would ignore all the changes which the civilisation of centuries has introduced into the conduct of war. Neither the exchange nor ransom of prisoners would be tolerated, but slavery or death would be the lot of captives.

"I have written thus much calamo currente; and as it is only possible that, even if sent to the Post-office at once, it will reach you in time for the proposed meeting, I have no opportunity for corrections, much less for transcribing. You will receive the note in its rough form, as an evidence of my desire to respond to your flattering invitation.

"Believe me, my dear sir,

"Yours very truly,

"John Westlake, Esq., &c.

"W. B. LAWRENCE.

"I might have referred, as authorities, to the recent German publicists, who, so far from according with the doctrines of Hautefeuille, contend for strictly confining war to the hostilities between State and State. Among them Heffter, on the authority of Zachariæ, maintains, that in the absence of express provisions, the modern laws of war prohibit any prejudice to the individual rights of the enemy's subjects, and that they are no longer opposed to their claims being regularly prosecuted before the competent tribunals. French translator, Bergsen, earnestly support principle of the Marcy amendment."

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS HILARY TERM, 1862.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved the following rules for the public examination students.

The attention of the students is requested following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose selves for examination, studentships shall be of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship conferred on the most distinguished student at public examination; and further, the examiners select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examination, and the Inns of Court to which such students may, if desired, dispense with any terms, notwithstanding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar, provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate if they shall be of opinion that the examination of students they select has been such as entitle them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take precedence in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No students shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during the whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Hilary Term to which a student of any of the Inns of Court is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship, or of obtaining a certificate of honour, or of obtaining a certificate of being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he proposes to go on or before Wednesday, the 1st day of January next; and he will further be required to put in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship, or for an honourable distinction, or whether he is desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Wednesday the 8th day of January next, and will be continued on Thursday and Friday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading Room, Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Wednesday morning, the 8th January, at nine, on Constitutional Law and Equity; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Equity.

Thursday morning, the 9th January, at nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Equity, &c.

Friday morning, the 10th January, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects, as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Friday afternoon there will be oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary, according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

THE READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY will expect the candidates for honours to be well acquainted with the origin and progress of our Laws and Constitution, as explained in chap. 8, part 3, of Hallam's History of the Middle Ages.

He will expect them to be well acquainted with the chapters in Hallam's Constitutional History which give an account of the Reigns of Elizabeth, the Stuarts, William III, and Anne; with the State Trials of persons eminent in our history, or remarkable for any other reason, from the time of James I to the Accession of George I; with the History of the Law of Treason and Libel.

All candidates will be required to know the leading events in English History from the Conquest to the Accession of George III; to have an accurate knowledge of the Reigns of the Stuart Kings, of Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, the Bill of Rights, the Habeas Corpus Acts, and the Act of Settlement.

THE READER ON EQUITY proposes to examine in the following books:—

1. Haynes's Outlines of Equity; Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence; Hunter's Elementary View of the Proceedings in a Suit in Equity, part 1.

2. The Cases and Notes contained in the first volume of White & Tudor's Leading Cases; the Act to further amend the Law of Property and to relieve Trustees, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35; the Act to further amend the Law of Property, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38; the Act to give to Trustees, Mortgagees, and others certain Powers now commonly inserted in Settlements, Mortgages, and Wills, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145; the General Orders of the Court of Chancery of the 1st February, 1861, and of the 5th February, 1861 (ante, p. 58); Mitford on Pleadings in the Court of Chancery—Introduction, c. 1, ss. 1, 2; c. 1, s. 3 (the first six pages); c. 2, s. 1; c. 2, s. 2, part 1 (the first three pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 2 (the first two pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 3; c. 3.

Candidates for certificates of having passed a satisfactory examination will be expected to be well acquainted with the books mentioned in the first of the above classes.

Candidates for a studentship or honours will be examined in the books mentioned in the two classes.

THE READER ON REAL PROPERTY LAW proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

1. Joshua Williams on the Law of Real Property, 5th ed.

2. The Specific Performance of Contracts—Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, c. 5, s. 3, 13th ed.; or Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, c. 18, 8rd ed.

3. The stats. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35 (Hunter's or Langley's edition), and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145.

4. The different kinds of Powers, and their Extinction and Suspension—Edwards v. Slater (Hardres' Reports, 410), and the Notes to that Case in Tudor's Leading Cases in Conveyancing, 277.

5. Hayes on the Common Law, Uses, and Trusts. Candidates for honours will be examined in all the foregoing books and subjects; candidates for a certificate in those under heads 1, 2, and 8.

THE READER ON JURISPRUDENCE AND THE CIVIL LAW proposes to examine candidates for honours in the following books and subjects:—

1. The Roman Law of Property and of Contract—Warnkönig's Institutiones Juris Romani Privati, lib. 2, and cc. 1-4 of lib. 3.

2. Austin's Province of Jurisprudence Determined; lecture 1 and lecture 6.

3. The last two Titles of the Digest—De Verborum Significatione and De Regulis Juris.

Candidates for a certificate will be examined in—

1. Sandars's Justinian, books 2 and 3.

2. The last Title of the Digest—De Regulis Juris.

THE READER ON COMMON LAW proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

Candidates for a pass certificate will be examined in—

1. The Ordinary Course of Procedure and Pleading in an Action.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 14, 1861.

WE continue our illustrations of succession duty difficulties with the cases of Lovelace's Settlement (5 Jur., N. S., part 1, pp. 428, 694; 4 De G. & J. 340); Lord Braybrooke v. The Attorney-General (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 741); and In re Barker (Id. 1061). In Lovelace's case the question was, whether succession duty was payable in respect of personal property appointed by will under a general power, the donee of the power and the appointees residing abroad. Maria Vanneck, being entitled under her father's will to a share of the residue of his estate, made a settlement on her marriage with Mr. Lovelace in 1817, under which, in default of issue, she took a general power of appointment. Having subsequently acquired a French domicile, she made a testamentary appointment of 10,000*l.*, part of the fund, to natives of France domiciled there.

The fund having been paid into court under the Trustees Relief Act, the Crown claimed succession and legacy duty on the 10,000*l.* The claim for legacy duty was abandoned at the hearing. Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., held that the succession duty was not payable, resting his decision, not on the foreign domicile of the testatrix and the legatees, but on the construction of the 2nd and 4th sections of the act with reference to general powers. The 4th section enacts, that "where any person shall have a general power of appointment, under any disposition of property taking effect upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, over property, he shall, in the event of his making any appointment thereunder, be deemed to be entitled, at the time of his exercising such power, to the property or interest thereby appointed as a succession derived from the donor of the power; and where any person shall have a limited power of appointment, under a disposition taking effect upon any such death, over property, any person taking any property by the exercise of such power shall be deemed to take the same as a succession derived from the person creating the power as predecessor." If the words "taking effect" refer directly, not to the appointment, but to the disposition creating the power, they must mean taking effect by giving a power of appointment on the death, &c.; for it cannot be supposed that a power given to B. to appoint after the death of A., who dies after the commencement of the act, was meant if it occurred in A.'s will, but was not meant if it occurred in a settlement made before the act. The meaning of the clause evidently is, that a special power, exercisable on the death of any person, shall, if exercised, pass a succession to the appointee as from the donor of the power; and that a general power given to any person to arise on a death shall, if exercised, be regarded as the same thing as a gift of the property to that person; the reference to death after the commencement of the act being necessary, for the same reason that it is necessary in the general enactment of the 2nd section. An example will make the application of the 4th section clear. A settlement is made by A., giving life interests in a fund successively to B. and C., and giving to C. power, at any time after the death of B., to appoint 10,000*l.* to whom he pleases, and to appoint other 15,000*l.* among his children. B. dies, and C. pays succession duty on his life interest. He afterwards appoints by deed both the 10,000*l.* and the 15,000*l.* to his son D., both sums to be paid after C.'s death. C. immediately becomes liable to pay succession duty on the 10,000*l.* as a succession from A. (subject to a deduction of the duty already paid in respect of his life interest—sect. 33), and D., on C.'s death, becomes liable to pay duty on the 15,000*l.* as a succession from A. If C. had exercised the general power by will, no duty would have been payable out of his estate, because he would not have come into the enjoyment of his succession in his lifetime; but his appointee, becoming entitled on his death, would be liable as a successor, under the general terms of the 2nd section; and then the question would be, whether C. or A. was the predecessor, or person from whom the interest was derived. We shall see, that, according to the decisions, A. must be regarded as the predecessor. It is evident that the 4th section has no direct bearing on the question in Re Lovelace. Mrs. Lovelace took, under a disposition made by herself, a general power of appointment, to take effect on her own death; her exercise of that power could not possibly make her or her estate liable to pay duty. (See sect. 20). Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., however, seems to have considered that the only question was, whether Mrs. Lovelace herself took a succession; for the argument on which he founded his decision was shortly this:—Under sect. 2, standing alone, the appointees would have taken a succession from the settlor as predecessor; but sect. 4 must be regarded as a substantive provision with respect to powers, shewing that they were not intended to be dealt with by sect. 2, but to be governed solely by sect. 4; and that section is confined to powers under wills taking effect, or settlements made, after the passing of the act. The appointment in question, therefore, being under a power in a settlement made before the act, was not within the act at all. Upon appeal, the Lords Justices held that the case was within the 2nd section, and that duty was payable by the appointees notwithstanding the foreign domicile of themselves and of the ap-pointor, because they took, not from Mrs. Lovelace as appointor, but under the settlement, which was made in England by Mrs. Lovelace while domiciled there. The property would not, if the appointment had not been exercised, have been part of Mrs. Lovelace's estate, but would have devolved on her next of kin. The decision is not satisfactory. The property substantially belonged to Mrs. Lovelace. If the settlement had been made by a third person, and had limited the property upon trust for the husband for life, and then upon such trusts as the wife should appoint, and she had appointed to herself for life, and then to A. B., she would have become liable, under sect. 4, to pay the full duty, as on a succession to the absolute ownership; and it would be inconsistent to hold, that while by express enactment she is to be deemed to be the owner of the property as successor for the purpose of paying duty, she is not the owner for the purpose of transmitting a succession. The obscurity occasioned in the 4th section by the words, "under any disposition of property taking effect," &c. is not chargeable on the framers of the clause, which originally stood thus—"When any person shall have a general power of appointment arising upon the death," &c., and was altered in committee by some one who did not know what he was doing.

In Lord Braybrooke v. The Attorney-General (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 741), R. N., being, under the will of his cousin Lord Howard de Walden, tenant for life of estates in Essex, with remainder to his son R. C. N. in tail, joined with R. C. N. in a disentailing deed, by which the estates were resettled, subject to R. N.'s life estate, to such uses as R. N. and R. C. N. should jointly appoint; and in default of appointment, to R. C. N. for life, with remainder over. In 1850 the power was exercised, and the estates were limited (discharged from a charge of 10,136*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* Consols belonging to R. N. absolutely) to such uses as the two should jointly appoint; and in default of appointment, to the use that R. C. N. should receive an annuity or rent-charge of 700*l.*, or, if he should marry, 1200*l.*, during the joint lives of himself and R. N. with remainder to R. C. N. for life, and remainders over. Upon the death of R. N. in 1858 duty at 10*l.* per cent., as on a succession from the testator, was claimed from R. C. N.; and the Court of Exchequer held that the claim was well founded, and that no allowance was to be made in respect of the charge given up by R. N., or of the cesser of the rent-charge of 1200*l.* On appeal, the House of Lords (against the opinion of Lord Wensleydale) confirmed the opinion of the Court below as to the rate of duty, except on so much of the value of the estate as represented the charge of Consols released by the father, which they held to be a succession derived from him, and except as to the rent-charge of 1200*l.*, for which (following la re Micklethwaite, 11 Exch. 452) they directed an allowance to be made, overruling The Attorney-General v. Sibthorp (3 H. & Norm. 424). The decision as to the main point in the case seems to follow of course from sect. 12 of the act, but we are unable even to conjecture the ground on which the allowance for the rent-charge was made. Under the will of Lord Howard de Walden, R. C. N. took the estate unconditionally upon the death of R. N.; the circumstance that under a distinct arrangement with R. N. he had been entitled to a rent-charge, which then ceased, could not affect the value of his succession from Lord Howard. The 38th section, on which the decision in Re Micklethwaite proceeded, evidently refers only to property which is given up by virtue of the instrument which creates the succession—not to a provision which, by the bounty of or by contract with a third person, is payable until the succession falls in.

Our principal reason, however, for referring to Braybrooke v. The Attorney-General is to shew that it affords no support to the propositions for which it was cited in Re Barker (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1061; 30 L. J., Ex., 404). There a testator devised lands to trustees in trust for his wife for her life, and then as she should by deed or will appoint. He died in 1850, and his widow, in 1858, by her will, appointed the lands to her late husband's niece. The majority of the Court of Exchequer, following the decision of the Lords Justices in Re Lovelace, and relying also on Lord Braybrooke's case, held that the uncle was the predecessor; but as both Martin and Channell, BB., relied on the 4th section of the act, which is clearly inapplicable, while Pollock, C. B., founded his judgment on the consideration that the substance, and not the technicality, of the transaction should be regarded, the case cannot be accepted as a great addition to the authority of In re Lovelace. The remark of the dissentient judge (Bramwell, B.) is unanswerable. What the appointee succeeded to it was in the appointor's power to grant or to withhold, or to limit to herself in fee.

We think that we have established our proposition, that the machinery of the Succession Duty Act is too delicate for ordinary use.

Correspondence.

MUGGLETON v. BARNETT AT THE ANTI-PODES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I am indebted to the courtesy of one of the judges of the Supreme Court at Sydney for the accompanying report of the case of Badham v. Shiel in that court. The point decided is one which has occasioned much discussion in your columns, and the report, if not too long for insertion, may, therefore, interest your readers. The case suggests the extreme importance of accuracy in our acts of Parliament, when doubts as to their construction occasion litigation to extend to such a distance.

Yours faithfully,

JOSHUA WILLIAMS.

SYDNEY SUPREME COURT.

[Before the full Court.]

BADHAM v. SHIEL.

The judges, differing in opinion on the point reserved in this case, delivered judgment separately.

CHIEF JUSTICE.—This is an action of debt against the grandson of one Mary Cannon, deceased, as her heir-at-law, on a covenant with the plaintiff entered into by her; to which the defendant has pleaded, that he had not nor has any lands by descent from the said Mary Cannon; and the question for our decision is, whether, having reference to the provisions of the Inheritance Act, sect. 2, that plea is established.

For the purposes of the argument the following facts are to be taken as proved or admitted:—First, that Mary Cannon was entitled in fee to the lands in question, and died in possession of them. Secondly, that the said Mary Cannon had two sons only, of whom one died childless in his mother's lifetime, and the other survived her, but died before acquiring possession of the lands. Thirdly, that the defendant is the only child of that son. But, fourthly, that Mary Cannon herself inherited the lands from her father, Thomas Bradbury, who was their first purchaser. The defendant, therefore, admitted that he inherits these lands, and contends that he does so exclusively by descent from Bradbury, his great grandfather—not from

He relies, consequently, on the words of the 2nd section of the schedule (adopted in this colony in the year 1837), which are, that "in every case descent shall be traced from the purchaser." It is maintained, in accordance with the opinions expressed by a learned and able writer in his "Principles of the Law of Real Property," and in his edition of "Watkins's Treatise on Descents," that by the force of those words, in connexion with the definitions given in the 1st section, the descent, or title to inherit land from one who himself took by descent, is from the purchaser alone; so that the person next entitled, after any taker by succession, acquires no title from the latter, or from any previous heir, but derives it from him only who first in that line obtained the property. The conclusion would be, of course, that the defendant here makes out his plea, that he took nothing by descent from the covenantor, his grandmother, he tracing his descent from, and being entitled to the land solely under and as heir to, another person.

After the fullest consideration which I have been able to give to the subject I am unable to adopt that conclusion. It appears to me, that whatever may have been the object of the Legislature in establishing the rule as to tracing descent invariably from the purchaser, it was not to make him the person to be descended from exclusively. Before the statute, possession, actual or constructive, in the last owner was necessary as a preliminary to the deducing of heirship from him. But now possession in the person "last entitled" is dispensed with. The question, then, will be, as I conceive, who, on the death of that owner or person, is his heir—who, as to the land in contest, is entitled to succeed him? In this respect I cannot find that the statute has made any alteration. It would seem, indeed, from the very nature of the case, that such must necessarily always be the inquiry. The enactment, however, then steps in, and supplies the rule for determining that question. It makes the guide and test of heirship, or right of succession, the capacity to trace descent from the purchaser of the property. So that in cases where the last owner was not also the purchaser, the claimant must go further back in his pedigree, and deduce his title by succession equally from that purchaser—one object of the rule clearly being, that when the heir of the last owner and the heir of the first purchaser are different individuals, the latter shall be preferred.

The case has been put of two brothers, A. and B., born of the same parents, and B. dying leaving two sons, C. and D., born of different mothers. C. purchases Blackacre, and dies intestate without children, before the statute. His brother D. could not then inherit, being of the half-blood only. The uncle A., therefore, becomes C.'s heir, and he enters accordingly. The new law of inheritance in the meantime passes, and after it has come into operation A. dies intestate, leaving W., his son, surviving. That son is undoubtedly the father's heir, yet he shall nevertheless not take Blackacre, for the right to inherit that must be traced, according to the statute, from C., the purchaser, whose heir is now D., the half-brother, still living. In this respect the law has effected two changes—one as to the capacity of the half-blood, the other as to looking beyond the last owner. But, as it seems to me, the question to be determined was the same that has been stated, namely, who, in respect of the particular land, was A.'s heir? And D. becomes by law that heir and takes Blackacre accordingly, because he is the next in descent from C., its purchaser. He succeeds to A., whose property the land was; not to C., for the latter's title had passed to another. There is nothing in the statute, according to my understanding of it, to preclude D., in such a case, from being deemed, as to Blackacre, heir to the one merely because he is heir to the other; for why may he not, as to that land, be deemed to descend from both?

The case of Doe v. Blackburn (1 Moo. & R. 547) is supposed to be decisive against that construction. I do not perceive that it is so. An illegitimate person purchased land, and died intestate, leaving a son, who entered into possession as heir, and died intestate and childless. The mother being dead, a descendant of her eldest brother claimed the property. It was held that he could not succeed, because he was unable to make himself heir according to the statute, by tracing descent from the purchaser. In other words, the person entitled to inherit to the son by consanguinity to him was one only who could trace descent from the father, who, being illegitimate, could have, in legal contemplation, no descendant except of his body.

On the other hand, the case of Cooper v. France (19 L. J., Ch., 313) has been relied on for the plaintiff; and although in some respects, perhaps, not altogether satisfactory, it appears to me to be an authority in his favour. Two sisters, coparceners, died intestate, each leaving a son. It was contended, that by the statute each son inherited from the grandfather as purchaser; and so that, on the death of one coparcener, her son and the other coparcener inherited, jointly and equally, her share of the property, because they then constituted jointly one heir in descent from such purchaser. But the Vice-Chancellor held that each son took his mother's share, neither less nor more. The decision seems to me to amount, in effect, to this—that the question is, in such cases (as I have said that I think it must be in every case), one of heirship to the party dying, not of heirship to the purchaser. The descent must be traced, but it does not follow that therefore it must be derived, from him. There, however, neither son could, in fact, establish an heirship to the purchaser. Each was, as it were, only half his heir. But if each was, by the right of representation, entitled in such a case to whatever his mother had by descent, all alike descending from the purchaser, the same right at least (with its corresponding liabilities) will, I should conceive, certainly exist here.

In the present case, actual possession in the party last entitled being unnecessary, the question primarily to be determined is, who is heir to that person? It is clear that the defendant is. That person's father was heir to Mary Cannon, as the latter was to Bradbury, the purchaser of the lands. But it is insisted that neither the defendant nor his father was heir to Mary Cannon in respect of those lands, although each in turn took them by inheritance; "for," says the defendant, "the property comes to me by descent from Bradbury alone." I am of opinion, on the contrary, that it descended to the defendant from, and as heir to, his father; and that the latter became entitled to the same from, and as heir to, Mary Cannon—both son and father alike being successively her heirs, since both trace descent from the same common ancestor. In other words, that each took the land by descent, or right to inherit from her, because each can, and does, trace descent equally from the purchaser, as the statute requires. And as the defendant represents his father, so the latter represented, and the defendant by succession to him now represents, Mary Cannon and their previous ancestor; and each, to the extent of the lands descended, became, therefore, upon succession thereto, liable respectively for the debt sought now to be recovered.

The case of Muggleton v. Barnett (27 L. J., Ex., 128) was supposed to have little bearing on the construction of this statute. To me, however, it appears in effect to be a strong authority on the question. The particular point discussed, indeed, was the extent of the custom of a certain manor, and on that the cause was decided. But if the enactment were what the defendant here contends for, that discussion would not have been to the purpose; and the very fact, therefore, that such was the point discussed, and that the judges held the Inheritance Act not to apply, shews the argument to be unfounded. The person last seized or entitled in the case cited was one Barnett; and the question raised was, he having died intestate and without issue, who was his heir. The plaintiff claimed as son of Barnett's great great uncle. There was evidence of a customary descent to certain collateral relatives of the last owner; but the Court held that there was none of a descent to his collaterals in so distant a degree. The defendant, therefore, had judgment; but had the question been as to descent from the purchaser, and him only, the plaintiff would have been entitled; for of that person he was clearly heir by the custom, within the degrees limited. No doubt it may be urged that the enactment did not mean to alter the customs of manors; and that in Barnett's case the custom related only to heirship to the person last seized. But the argument surely is quite as strong with respect to the altering of rules of the common law, by which the question always was as to heirship to him that was last seized.

It appears to me unreasonable, moreover, in a case of this kind, to hold that the heir takes only from the remote, and not the immediate, ancestor. A father, largely indebted, purchases land, and dies intestate, leaving a son. The son here clearly inherits from the father, and need not trace his descent higher, and so, confessedly, is liable at law for the father's specialty debts to the value of that land. But the father had other lands descended to him from his father, the purchaser of them. The son descends alike from both. On the defendant's construction, however, he inherits the last-mentioned land exclusively from his grandfather, and so, in respect of these, is not liable for his father's debts at all. It is, indeed, not contended, for the defendant, that the son would become thus irresponsible except at law; for the remedy in equity, it is said, would still be open to the creditors. But the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, as I read it, contemplates only proceedings against the heir of the debtor. If, therefore, in the case supposed, the son be not that heir, but takes from the debtor's father alone, it seems clear that the creditors would have no remedy whatever.

Lastly, it may be remarked, that in many cases before the Inheritance Act it was necessary to establish heirship by tracing descent from the purchaser. The heirship, nevertheless, in those cases, however traced, was still heirship to the last owner, who might, in respect of different lands, have different heirs. So, in cases of inheritance among collateral relations, the descent was traced from their common ancestor; yet it was not to him, but to the last proprietor, that the heirship was. And, in like manner, sect. 5 of the act, as it appears to me, treats heirship between brothers, which is put on the same footing as descent among other collaterals, as a descent or inheriting from the deceased brother; although now, as in other cases of collaterals, that descent is not to be considered immediate, but is to be traced through the parent.

We may admit that the new statute has introduced some difficulties, and that, perhaps, better provisions might have been established by adopting entirely the recommendations on which, for the most part, it is founded. But I cannot find that it has so entirely subverted the old law as has been contended by the defendant; and my judgment, therefore, on the plea now in question, is against him.

MILFORD, J.—The Chief Justice has gone so fully into the law of the case that I only wish to add what may appear to be a summary of his judgment.

The construction of the act, without reference to the cases which have been commented upon by his Honor, does not appear to me to be very difficult, though there has been much discussion on the subject, both in and out of the courts. The object of the act is not to cause land to descend to the heir of a person who before the act would not have been the stock from whom the land would descend, but to point out a new method of discovering who is the heir of such person. The heir of the person last entitled is to be found, not the stock. If A. acquire land otherwise than by descent, and die, we are to seek for his heir; if he inherit land we are to do the same thing; but the act in the latter case points out how it is to be done, viz. by tracing the heirship from the person last entitled, who did not take by descent, in the act called the purchaser. There may be two heirs to one person—one of land purchased by him, another of land descended on him.

The Real Property Commissioners did not recommend this plan of tracing the descent in cases like the present, but recommended that it should be similar to the descent of a reversion—i. e. that the stock should be different. The statute has, however, pointed out a course not in accordance with that recommended.

What was said by Gresswell, J., in Muggleton v. Barnett, in the Exchequer Chamber, decided on a question as to the extent of a custom, clearly shews that he entertained this view of the enactment. He says, "The eldest son of the eldest son of the great grandfather may be the common-law heir of the person last seised, ascertained in the manner pointed out by the Legislature; but that will not make the youngest son," &c.

By "the common-law heir of the person last seised" the judge must mean the common-law heir of the person last entitled to the land; for seisin, under the act, has nothing to do with the question; it is no longer necessary. He does not say "the heir of the purchaser," who, under the act, is a different person from the person last entitled, but "the heir of such last-mentioned person."

In the present case we must seek for the heir of Mrs. Cannon. She was entitled to the land which afterwards descended to the defendant, and she gave the bond by virtue of which the plaintiff sues. Whether Mrs. Cannon became entitled by descent or by purchase is immaterial, except that, as she took by descent, we must find out her heir by tracing him from Bradbury, the purchaser, not from her. The defendant is her heir, found so by tracing his descent from Bradbury, and he has the land by descent from her.

The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to sue the defendant on the bond given by Mrs. Cannon.

WISE, J.—At the trial of this cause before me the defendant obtained a verdict. A new trial was moved for on several grounds, and was argued before Sir J. Dickinson, Milford, J., and myself in December term.

In consultation upon the important questions raised it occurred to us that, even assuming that there was a misdirection, the action was not maintainable, according to the view expressed by Mr. Joshua Williams, the able and well-known writer, in the note to Watkins on Descents (p. 120). After shewing that under the old law the remainder or reversion on a freehold was not subject to the debts of the mesne remainderman or reversioner, where the stock of descent had not been changed, because he does not take by descent from such remainderman or reversioner, but from the original donor, and so paramount the mesne charges, the annotator adds—"The rule appears to extend also to estates in possession under the new act. As to these also the descent shall be traced from the purchaser; so that if A., a debtor, who has acquired land by descent, die intestate, B., the person next entitled to inherit, would not be subject, in respect of such lands, to A.'s bond debts; for the descent, or the title to inherit lands by reason of consanguinity, shall be traced from the purchaser; so that B. derives no title from A., but only from the purchaser, and therefore paramount A.'s debts."

The point not having been raised on the argument, it was intimated to the parties that the Court would sit specially to hear it argued; but the offer not being accepted, it was argued last term before the Court as now constituted.

The question is one of admitted difficulty, and formed the subject of a vigorous discussion in the pages of "The Jurist" for 1858; and after the fullest consideration of the arguments there adduced, and by Mr. Martin for the plaintiff, I am of opinion that the action is not maintainable upon the state of facts, which, for the purposes of the present argument, are assumed to be proved.

I have, indeed, a great distrust of my own opinion in this case, as it is not shared by my brother judges, and because it also appears to be contrary to a decision hereafter referred to; but as, after repeated examination of the grounds of that opinion, I do not feel myself able to accede to the opposite view, I am bound to express my own.

The question turns upon the true construction of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, adopted by the 7 Will. 4, No. 8.

This statute altered the law of inheritance in many important particulars; and, as if in anticipation that some confusion would arise by the use of words that had by previous user acquired a particular meaning, the interpretation clause provides that "the words and expressions hereinafter mentioned, which in their ordinary signification have a more confined or a different meaning, shall in this act, except where the nature of the provision or the context of the act shall exclude such construction, be interpreted as follow."

A reference to the old law is essential to ascertain the effect of the new provisions. An estate vested by descent—that is, by act of law; or by purchase—that is, by action of the party; or, as it is sometimes expressed, to which a man cometh not by descent—e. g. devise. At common law, if a man bound his heirs by deed, such heir was liable, provided lands descended to him from such ancestor; and, according to the rule seisina facit stipitem, inheritance was to be traced from the person who last died actually seised—that is, who was in possession by himself, or a tenant for years, or had received some rent (in the case of a freehold lease), or had exercised some act of ownership. Thus, if the right to an estate descended to a person who himself died without having taken possession, or having had it by construction of law, the inheritance was to be traced, not from such person, but from the person who died last seised. The son, therefore, of the person who thus died without seisin, notwithstanding that he only got the land through his father, could not plead riens per descent, because he did not trace from his father. This is shewn by the following note of Lord Hale (Co. Litt. 116. n. 2)—"Grandfather, father, and son; grandfather dies; father is bound in an obligation or warranty, and dies before entry:—Held, the son not liable, because he shall make himself heir to his grandfather."

Yet he would have been heir to his father in respect to any lands of which he had been seised, and was not heir as to the other for the purposes of this liability. Although the descent was traced through his father, it was traced from his grandfather. (See also the case of Busby v. Dixon, 3 B. & Cr. 13, 298).

But the rule non jus sed seisinam facit stipitem did not hold in the descent of estates tail, it being only necessary, in deriving a title to an estate of this kind by descent, to deduce the pedigree from the first purchaser, and to shew that the claimant is heir to him; for the issue in tail claim per formam doni—that is, they are as much within the view and intention of the donor, and as personally and precisely described in the gift, as any of their ancestors. Likewise, if the estate which descended was of a kind in which the owner cannot acquire actual seisin of the land (as in the case of a reversion or remainder expectant upon freehold, where the actual seisin belongs to the particular tenant), the rule was, that the claimant must trace his descent from, or, as it was usually expressed, make himself heir to, the purchaser.

Now, one of the leading objects of the act was to get rid of the anomalous consequences arising from the rule seisinam facit stipitem, and it was proposed to enact that estates should pass to the heir of the person who last died entitled, although he might not have had seisin; but this proposal was not adopted, and the descent is to be traced from the purchaser. Accordingly sect. 2 enacts that “in every case descent shall be traced from the purchaser;” or, substituting for these words the meaning given by the interpretation clause, “The title to inherit land by reason of consanguinity, as well when the heir shall be the ancestor as when he shall be a child, shall be traced from the person who last acquired the land otherwise than by descent; and the last person who had a right to the land, whether he did or did not obtain the possession of the receipts of the rents and profits thereof, shall be the purchaser, unless it be proved that he inherited the same, in which case the person from whom he inherited the same shall be considered to have been the purchaser, unless it shall be proved that he inherited the same; and in like manner the last person from whom the land shall be proved to have been inherited shall in every case be considered to have been the purchaser, unless it shall be proved that he inherited the same.” (Sect. 2).

In any given case, therefore, if it be proved that the last person entitled did inherit, descent is not traced from him, but it is traced from the statutory stock, i. e. the purchaser, as defined in the 2nd section. The purchaser is, in fact, the only root from which descent can be traced. (See Stephen's Commentaries, 1, 390, 421, 424, 4th ed.) That very learned author uses the following language:—“Having now treated of the several rules of which we conceive the law of descent, as new modelled by the act of Parliament just mentioned, to consist, we may remark, as the result of the investigation, that, upon the death of the owner of an estate in fee-simple, we are to ascertain the heir by considering, first, who was the purchaser of that estate, according to the sense which the statute has affixed to the term; and we are then to look for the heir first among his issue.”

In strict analogy, therefore, to the former rule of law, the grandson in the present case cannot be charged, because he traces his descent from the purchaser, who is not the person who made the bond, but paramount.

This, no doubt, is a change in the law; but the statute does change the law in other important points, as to the liability of heirs, and therefore alters the meaning of the term “riens per descent.” At common law, if a testator made the same disposition of his estate as the law would have done if he had been silent, the will, being unnecessary, was void; and if the testator had bound his heirs, the devisee, when sued, could not plead riens per descent. But that is not so now; for, by sect. 3, such devisee shall be considered to have acquired the same as purchaser. If sued, therefore, he would succeed on the plea of riens per descent, because he no longer takes as heir, but as purchaser.

Again: could it be doubted that if a person, having made a bond, died entitled to, but not seised of, lands, his son would be liable under the 2nd section, unless it were proved that his father inherited it? whereas, under the old law, he would not have been liable. Here, again, the 2nd section gives a new meaning to the expression “taking by descent.” Strickland v. Strickland (10 Sim. 374) is an express authority that this statute is not to be considered as relating exclusively to the law of inheritance, but also has application to assets; and therefore the heir takes as devisee for all purposes, and pecuniary legatees are not entitled to have the assets marshalled as against him. The illustrations already given shew that the statute may in some cases impose new liabilities; and it seems to me, therefore, reasonable to apply the same construction, even although the effect may be to prevent the person who thus takes through his father from being liable in this form of action. As, by the technical rule, seisinam facit stipitem, lands might go to the son free from the father's debts, although the father could have sold, mortgaged, or devised them—a. g. a reversion expectant upon an estate of freehold—so, by the statute, lands might come to the person enjoying the title to inherit from the person not proved to have himself inherited them, and discharged of the common-law liability for the debts of the person through whom he traces this title, and who could, in like manner, have sold, mortgaged, or devised them.

The 5th section was relied upon to shew that the 2nd section was not to be construed in the way I have construed it. But that, taken in connexion with the 5th section, enabling lineal ancestors to be heirs to their issue, shews that the words “every case,” in the 2nd section, are to have their natural meaning. No brother shall be considered to inherit immediately from his brother, but every descent from a brother shall be traced through the parent. If a son purchases an estate, and die without issue, leaving a father and a brother, the brother does not take, but the father. Why? Because he traces his descent, i. e. his title, to inherit from his son. But, on the father's death, the brother does inherit. Why? Because he traces his descent from his brother through the father. If indeed, the effect of this construction would be to enable the son to enjoy the lands without payment of the debts, I should have greater doubt as to its correctness. But the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, which was passed the same day, must be taken in connexion with this statute (see Strickland v. Strickland), although it does not appear to have been adopted here, probably in consequence of the 5 Geo. 3. The first clause of the 1st section seems to be clearly of wider scope than the last. It enacts, that when any person shall die seised of or entitled to any estate or interest in lands, &c., which he shall not by his last will have charged with or devised subject to the payment of his debts, the same shall be assets, to be administered in courts of equity, for the payment of the just debts of such persons, as well debts due on simple contract as on specialty. Hamer's Devisee's case (2 De G., Mac., & G. 366), in which it was decided, that not only debts of the deceased are charged upon real estates, but also all liabilities which may result out of obligations entered into during his life, is an express authority that the first part of the enactment is not to be limited to the cases in which the remedies referred to in the second will apply.

Upon the whole I am of opinion, that, whether foreseen or not, the new modes of inheritance (which, it must be recollected, are entirely a matter of positive law, and not of right) have affected the old remedies; in other words, the remedies applicable to one state of the law do not apply to another.

It seems to me, further, that this view of the statute was at first generally entertained. (See Doe v. Blackburn, 1 Moo. & R. 547; Burton's Compend., by E. P. Cooper; Hayes on Conveyancing, 313; 3 Bl. Com., by Sweet, 240; Sugd. V. & P. 550, 551, 11th ed.; and Williams on Real Prop.) But the decision in Cooper v. France (19 L. J., Ch. 314) appears to establish that the 2nd section of the statute does not apply at all to lineal descents. Sir L. Shadwell, V. C., is there reported to have said—"It seems to me that the meaning of the act was to leave the law of inheritance, in cases absolutely plain, just as it found them, and only to lay down rules where there was any doubt existing."

Lord St. Leonards terms this a judicious interpretation of the statute; but with every respect for the Vice-Chancellor's learning and judicial authority, I must say that I am wholly unable to follow the reasoning by which he appears to have laid down what strikes me as altogether a new canon of construction, and which would almost prevent any effect being given to the statute; for the whole statute, except the 8th section, applies to cases which were clear before the statute. The peculiar legal incidents of estates in coparceny may, perhaps, be sufficient to support the decision (see the argument fully stated in Williams on Real Prop., 4th ed.); and although not satisfied with it, I should follow it in a precisely similar case. But the present is not such a case, and I think myself at liberty to follow the natural meaning of the statute, and the analogy to a well-settled rule existing when the statute was passed. Muggleton v. Barnett (27 L. J., Ex., 124) was also referred to as an authority; but the decision does not appear to me to have been at all founded upon the construction of the statute. The question was as to the amount of evidence requisite to establish a peculiar custom of descent in the manor; and Wightman, J., who was one of the majority of the court, in the course of his judgment, says, "The stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, does not appear to me to have any bearing upon the case;" and Crompton, J., also one of the majority, says, "The Inheritance Act points out a new mode of tracing descent, but does not seem to me to extend the operation of a custom of descent," &c. It is not a little singular that the research of the counsel who argued the case, as well as that of my brother judges and myself, has failed to discover any instance of an action of this kind in England since the passing of the Inheritance Act; and it is for this reason that I have more freely referred to text-writers on the subject.

Since writing this judgment my attention has been drawn to the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 19—"Where there shall be a total failure of heirs of the purchaser, then and in every such case the land shall descend, and the descent shall thenceforth be traced from the person last entitled to the land, as if he had been the purchaser thereof."

This enactment seems to me entirely to support my view of the statute. It implies that the heir of the purchaser is to be sought, not the heir of the person who was last seised, who is included in the words "last entitled to," according to the interpretation clause; and by enacting that the descent shall be traced from the person last seised when there is a total failure of the heirs of the purchaser, it recognises the law to be that it is not so traced unless there is a total failure of heirs. I am, therefore, of opinion that this motion ought to be discharged.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 21, 1861.

As a general rule, trustees, in the absence of an express power, were formerly not justified in investing trust funds otherwise than upon Government or Bank securities; and inasmuch as the Court of Chancery selected, for the purpose of investing the monies of the suitors, the 3l. per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, trustees desiring to act with caution, and to avoid being held liable for any fluctuation in the value of the trust property which might occur in consequence of an investment in other funds, generally invested the monies intrusted to them in the 3l. per Cent. Consols.

This field of investment being usually considered too narrow, trustees in general had given to them a power (much less extensive than that now used) to invest in Government or real securities in England or Wales.

Now, there are two classes of persons interested in enlarging such limited powers of investment: the first class consists of those persons whose property may be improved by causing capital to flow in a different direction or over a wider space; the second class are those who take a limited estate in the trust funds, and who therefore desire to get as high a rate of interest as possible, so long as their beneficial enjoyment lasts, without regard to any deterioration which may take place in the capital from which it proceeds, to the detriment of those entitled in remainder.

A combination of these two classes led to the passing of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 29 (Lynch's Act), by which trustees, authorised under any previous or subsequent power to advance money upon landed securities in England, Wales, or Great Britain, unless expressly restricted, may advance money upon real securities in Ireland, with the consent of the person whose consent may be required; and if infants unborn or insane persons are interested, the loan must be obtained in a cause, or upon a petition in a summary way. (Ex parte French, 7 Sim. 510; Morris v. Wright, 14 Beav. 291).

The next act giving a parliamentary power of investment to trustees was Lord St. Leonards' Act to further amend the Law of Property and to relieve Trustees, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, in the 32nd section of which it is enacted, that "when a trustee, executor, or administrator shall not, by some instruments creating his trust, be expressly forbidden to invest any trust fund on real securities in any part of the United Kingdom, or on the stock of the Bank of England or Ireland, or on East India Stock, it shall be lawful for such trustee, executor, or administrator to invest such trust fund on such securities or stock; and he shall not be liable on that account as for a breach of trust, provided that such investment shall in other respects be reasonable and proper" (sect. 32).

It should be here mentioned, that although the clause just quoted appears in Lord St. Leonards' Act, he is not himself responsible for it. It was added in the Commons, and Lord St. Leonards, who appears entirely to disapprove of it, nevertheless allowed it to pass through the House of Lords without asking their Lordships to disagree with it, as by so doing the bill in which it was included (the value of which is universally acknowledged) might have been endangered.

The next act to be noticed is the Act to further amend the Law of Property, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38. There power is given to the Lord Chancellor, &c. to make general orders from time to time as to the investment of cash, under the control of the Court, either in 3l. per Cent. Consols, or Reduced or New Bank Annuities, or in such other stocks, funds, or securities as he &c. shall see fit; and power is given to the Lord Chancellor, &c. to make orders, as he shall deem proper, for the conversion of any 3l. per Cent. Bank Annuities then standing, or which might thereafter stand, in the name of the Accountant-General, in trust in any cause or matter, into any such other stocks, funds, or securities upon which, by any such general order as aforesaid, cash under the control of the Court may be invested; all orders for such conversion of Bank Annuities into other funds or securities to be made upon petition, to be presented by any of the parties interested, in a summary way, and such parties are to be served with notice thereof as the Court shall direct (sect. 10).

By a subsequent section it is enacted, that "when any such general order as aforesaid shall have been made, it shall be lawful for trustees, executors, or administrators, having power to invest upon parliamentary stocks, funds, or securities, or any of them, to invest such trust funds, or any part thereof, in any of the stocks, funds, or securities in or upon which, by such general order, cash under the control of the Court may from time to time be invested" (sect. 11).

By an Order of Court dated the 1st February, 1861, in pursuance of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, "cash under the control of the Court may be invested in Bank Stock, East India Stock, Exchequer Bills, and 2l. 10s. per Cent. Annuities, and upon mortgage of freehold and copyhold estates respectively in England and Wales, as well as in Consolidated 3l. per Cent. Annuities, Reduced 3l. per Cent. Annuities, and New 3l. per Cent. Annuities" (rule 1). By another rule service of the petition is provided for (rule 2).

Vict. c. 145. It enacts, "Trustees having trust money in their hands, which it is their duty to invest at interest, shall be at liberty, at their discretion, to invest the same in any of the parliamentary stocks or public funds, or in Government securities; and such trustees shall also be at liberty, at their discretion, to call in any trust funds invested in any other securities than as aforesaid, and also from time to time, at their discretion, to vary any such investments as aforesaid for others of the same nature: provided always, that no such original investment as aforesaid (except in the 3l. per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities), and no such change of investment as aforesaid, shall be made where there is a person, under no disability, entitled in possession to receive the income of the trust fund for his life, or for a term of years determinable with his life, or for any greater estate, without the consent in writing of such person" (sect. 25).

Several questions have arisen upon some of these investment acts, or rather upon the first two of them—first, as to their application; secondly, as to what investments will be authorised by the Court of Chancery under them; and, thirdly, as to what investments trustees are justified in making.

1. The question arose in Re The Colne Valley and Halstead Railway Bill (1 Johns. 528; 5 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1123), whether, inasmuch as, previous to the passing of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, there was East India Stock in existence, the India 5l. per Cent. Loan, which was authorised by the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 39, to which the royal assent was given on the same day as the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, came within the meaning of East India Stock there mentioned. Lord Campbell, C. (sitting with the Lords Justices), thought that it did; but the Lords Justices took a different view from his Lordship, although they all concurred in deciding the case upon another ground.

Assuming, however, that the East India 5l. per Cent. Loan does not come within the meaning of "East India Stock," under the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, does it not come within the meaning of "East India Stock" mentioned in the General Order of the 1st February, 1861, made in pursuance of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38? There does not appear to have been any express decision upon the subject; but, as the term used in the Order of the 1st February, 1861, is sufficiently general to comprehend the 5l. per Cent. India Loan, and it was in existence at the time of the passing of the act giving authority to the Lord Chancellor to make the General Order, it seems that the 5l. per Cent. India Loan may be now considered as coming within the meaning of India Stock.

It was held by Sir J. Romilly, M. R., in Re Miles' Trusts (6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1236), that the 32nd section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, does not apply to trustees appointed by instruments executed before the passing of that act. A different view was adopted by Sir J. Stuart, V. C., in Re Riche's Trust, Jan. 27, 1860 (Morgan's Statutes and Orders, 329, 2nd ed.), and in The Equitable Insurance Company v. Fuller (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 307), where an order was made upon a settlement executed in 1837.

2. With regard to what investments will be authorised by the Court, it has been decided that the Court will not, in the absence of special circumstances, authorise, under the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, the investment in the India 5l. per Cent. Loan. (In re The Colne Valley and Halstead Railway Bill, 1 Johns. 528; 5 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1123; In re Fromow's Estate, 8 Weekly Rep. 272).

In the case of Cohen v. Waley (9 Weekly Rep. 137), being an application under two acts (the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, and the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38), an order was made by Sir J. Stuart, V. C., at the instance of a tenant for life, for the sale of Consols, and the investment in Bank Stock. In the case of The Equitable Insurance Company v. Fuller (7 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 307), upon the application of the settlor, who was tenant for life under the settlement, with a power, in the event of her surviving her husband, to revoke the trusts, except those declared in favour of her children, Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., sanctioned a transfer of the settled funds from Consols and New 3l. per Cents. to East India Stock or Bank Stock. His Honor, after referring to the stats. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, and the General Order of the 1st February, 1861, said it was the duty of the Court to carry out the regulation made in accordance with those statutes. No doubt considerable damage would result to the capital in all such cases by the change of investment. On the other hand, if he did not make the order in this case, it would be impossible ever to do it in any case. The application was by the settlor herself. Whatever might be the case where the application was by persons who had not created the trust it was not necessary to consider. His Honor concluded by saying, that as it was an application by the tenant for life for her own benefit, and there would be an absolute loss to those interested in remainder, he certainly should not charge the costs upon the capital.

In the case of Bishop v. Bishop (9 Weekly Rep. 549), where a married woman was under a will entitled to a fund of nearly 30,000*l.* Consols for her separate use for life, with remainder to her children, it was proposed, for the purpose of obtaining better interest, to invest part of the fund in the East India and Bank Stock, leaving the remainder in Consols; and the married woman who presented the petition asked also that a sum of 2000*l.* might be carried over to the trustees of her settlement. Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., on the authority of The Equitable Insurance Company v. Fuller, made the order, and also considered that the petitioner ought to have the costs, because it was necessary to come into court for the purpose of carrying over the 2000*l.*

Notwithstanding the last-mentioned authorities, it seems to be now clear, that in the absence of special circumstances, whatever trustees may of themselves be justified in doing, the Court, having a discretionary power, will not, in the exercise of its discretion, authorise the conversion of Consols into India Stock. See Cockburn v. Peel (9 Weekly Rep. 725), where Lord Campbell, C., and the Lords Justices, affirming the decision of Sir J. Stuart, V. C., upon the application of a tenant for life under a will, with remainder to her children, refused to order a sum of 55,506*l.* Consols to be invested in East India Stock, although it was proposed to form a sinking fund, to guarantee against any loss in the event of the East India Stock being redeemed. Lord Campbell, C., said that he did not think they could safely lay down any more precise rule than that in the absence of any special circumstances which might make the desired transfer asked by the tenant for life beneficial to those in remainder, irrespective of pecuniary calculations, the transfer ought not to be permitted, if on pecuniary calculations it might be injurious to those in remainder. In the present case his Lordship added, "The income of the mother under the will is ample, and there is no suggestion of any advantage likely to arise to the children from the proposed change." And Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., said, "There might be cases where, from the exigencies of families, it would be desirable for the children that the income of the parents should be increased, but in such cases the circumstances should be stated in the petition."

We may, therefore, conclude that, as a general rule, the Court will not authorise an investment in India

Stock, whatever it may do with regard to Bank Stock, unless there are special circumstances which would render it beneficial to the reversioners as well as to the persons having limited interests. In the case of Cohen v. Waley the Court ordered an investment in Bank Stock. In the case of The Equitable Insurance Company v. Fuller, where it will be observed that an investment in East India Stock or Bank Stock was authorised by the Court, the fact that the application was made by the settlor seems to have been considered a special circumstance. In Bishop v. Bishop, which Sir R. T. Kindersley, V. C., appears to have decided upon the authority of The Equitable Insurance Company v. Fuller, the distinctive feature in that case, viz. of the application being made by the settlor, was wanting; nor do there appear to have been any special circumstances for making the investment, although it will be observed that the change of investment was only made with regard to part of the trust fund.

The cases of Bishop v. Bishop and The Equitable Insurance Company v. Fuller were cited in Cockburn v. Peel; but as the learned judges then constituting the full court of appeal did not make any observation with respect to them, we can only hazard an opinion, from the rules they there laid down, that it is at least doubtful whether, under similar circumstances, they would take the same view as the learned judges who decided those cases.

3. With regard to what investments trustees will be justified in making, it seems that, in the exercise of a fair discretion, they might, without being guilty of a breach of trust, make a change of investments to Bank Stock, East India Stock, or other funds authorised by the acts and General Order, which the Court would not itself sanction. This is laid down most distinctly by Lord Campbell in Re The Colne Valley and Halstead Railway Bill, though the Lords Justices cautiously avoided giving an opinion upon that point. However, in the subsequent case of Cockburn v. Peel, where the application for an investment in East India Stock was refused by the Court, Sir G. J. Turner, L. J., said, "It was not, however, intended to embarrass trustees when the fund was not in court. They would, in making such investment, be entitled to the protection of the Court, if they acted bonâ fide, to the best of their discretion."
